I do not want to take that too far: there must be Government support for the arts, but they must not depend on it completely. It may be a sign of the success of an arts policy if the arts can flourish, as some of my hon. Friends might put it, without the Government. There will always be a need for the link; it is, perhaps, a question of terminology.

Governments can harm the arts. Buildings must be built, but a good architect will design something that is pleasing and lasting. A poor one may save money in the short term, but at the expense of the environment. The same is true when the Government are the customers of the arts. One can scrimp and save, but the end product will not last or be of good quality, and ultimately the next generation will not bless us for it. That goes for the grants system, the tax system, and the planning system.

At a time when the Government are seeking to raise standards of education with the national curriculum and other aspects of the Education Reform Bill, this is not the moment to say that the Government have no role in raising standards in the arts. The two must go together; if we want a better educated society we must include the arts as part of that education.

Of course the public purse is not bottomless. Far too many people never go to a theatre or exhibition hall from one year to the next, although they would be sorely disappointed if, as a result of their non-attendance and the Government's non-subvention, every theatre that they passed was full of Paul Raymond's frolics. The other side of the coin is that there is a limit to which the taxpayer who does not interest himself in the arts will go. That is why we have to encourage other sources of funding—ticket sales, quality of performance, and encouraging private patronage are all important.

Just as the barons of yesterday saw it as their duty to support the arts, so we must encourage the barons of today to do likewise. I think particularly of companies, who can do more to sponsor performances and exhibitions. The same is true of the trade unions, with their massive resources. Perhaps we cannot quite envisage Harold Pinter taking up an arts residency in Congress house, but we can at least encourage the unions to sponsor the arts—particularly the community arts.

I know that the television companies are great sponsors of the arts by producing what they do. However, there is a problem with sponsorship by those companies. If they want to show a massive production at, say, Covent Garden, there is an undeniable cost. Covent Garden has its own sponsors, but under the IBA rules the television companies are precluded from talking to Covent Garden's sponsors—or those of Glyndebourne or the National theatre—to work out a quid pro quo under which the name of the sponsor could be highlighted on the credits of the televised version. Perhaps my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts could examine that problem with the broadcasting authorities to see whether IBA rules could be adapted to take into account the modern needs of the television companies. I am sure that we all want them to continue supporting the arts.

Without state sponsorship, national and local, large areas of the arts would remain out in the cold. These include the prestige productions of major opera and ballet companies, new forms of the arts, the arts in poorer and remote parts of the country, and the range of community arts. I believe the Government have a good record of funding the arts, and any Minister who has achieved for the first time three-year funding at the level that my right hon. Friend has achieved can be proud of what has been contributed to the arts.

One must be conscious of major companies' continuing need for Government sponsorship to enable them to do more than just put on big performances in London, but to take quality productions to the regions and abroad. There will be economic spin-offs for the country if that is done.

Meagre increases have gone to national companies. This year, the figure reached the dizzy height of a 2·5 per cent. increase for English National Opera. In some cases, there was a zero increase. We must examine whether the 25 per cent. cut that the ENO has suffered since 1979 is right. The ENO has done what the Government and I would ask it to do. It has gone out and got sponsorship. To a considerable extent, needs are not the same as they were in 1979. Nevertheless, as my right hon. Friend knows, there are obstacles. One obstacle is the incentive scheme limitations, whereby the limit is £250,000 in every fourth year. For a large company such as ENO, the grant increase is a mere 1 per cent. per year, however successful it is in raising private sector money.

A small adjustment could be made to encourage even more self-sufficiency among companies. But for English National Opera and its sister company, the London Festival Ballet, as my right hon. Friend knows, there is a much more important obstacle. It is the continuing inability of the Department of the Environment to resolve how they are to receive the money that, after the end of the GLC, was channelled through Westminster city council. Come the new local government finance system, that money will not be able to be channelled through Westminster city council.

The sum involved is not peanuts. In the case of English National Opera, it is about 9 per cent. of its income. For the London Festival Ballet, it is some 23 per cent. of its income. They are major items of expenditure, and they are preventing both companies from planning ahead. When a company has shown that it is willing to get sponsorship, that it can sell tickets, and put on quality productions, Parliament has a duty to respond. It is not the reponsibility of my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts, but I urge him to put pressure on his colleagues from the Department of the Environment to get the matter put right.

My hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) briefly referred to the Horniman museum—I have taken an interest in it through the Education Reform Bill and in the Geffrye museum. We were pleased that, the other day, an announcement was made in the other place that funding is to be secured and that there will be national status for those museums. But it is not total national museum status, and funding is on a temporary basis through the London Residuary Body. The matter needs to be fleshed out a little if those museums are to have confidence in their future. My right hon. Friend the Minister is keen that they should have that confidence. In this case, it is a matter of his talking to his colleagues in the Education Department to ensure that the matter is put right.

[Mr. John Bowis]

Politicians are not the best people to run the arts. We should leave it to bodies such as the Arts Council. We can always keep a safety net by appointing some bodies. The arm's-length approach is correct. Nevertheless, there is a need for a framework.

I declare an interest as a patron of the pub theatre network. These are the club theatres, which are small theatres which produce a lot of good and innovative work on a small scale to small audiences, and which answer a real need. Unfortunately, no set of rules governs them, so when local authorities inspect them to see whether they are meeting the requirements of the law, they are not sure by which rules to judge them.

The local authorities can look at the licensing Acts and say that as it is a club, it must be a drinking club. Occasionally, one gets drinks in pub theatres—surprise, surprise—so they are clobbered by rules designed for drinking clubs. Those rules are there not to protect the public from plays but to protect minors from alcoholism. That needs to be brought into line, particularly as the 48-hour requirement for membership of drinking clubs bears no relation to the needs of a pub theatre.

Club theatres can get clobbered under the cinema club rules, which are there to protect the public from obscenity and bear no relation to the small club theatre. Alternatively, they get clobbered under the licensed theatre rules, which are designed for theatres with a capacity of 150 to 200—rather than 25—and for separate buildings. I know that my right hon. Friend has taken this on board in the past, and I ask him to press the matter, particularly in the light of the current case with the Man in the Moon, which is having problems with its local council of Kensington. Because there are no guidelines or rules on health and safety for these theatres, they should be brought into our artistic life in a structured way as soon as possible.

We have been looking at the arts in general, and have picked up many themes. One is that the more that we can encourage participation in the arts, the more we shall contribute to society. The people who find fulfilment out of discovering their ability in the arts are the people who find self-confidence in their life as well. It may be that they are unemployed or have been in prison or are simply bored. However, if they can find a fulfilment through the arts, they will not be a problem to society. They will not be the vandals of tomorrow. The more that we can do through art in education, not just teaching it but using it, and the more we can do to enable people to participate, the better the society that we shall have to leave to the next generation.

The role of Governments in the arts is a delicate and critical one. It is one of nurturing, encouraging and sponsoring, of intervention without interference, of not controlling but not ignoring. If the Government can find the right balance between fostering by the state and letting children grow tall in the arts, they will have contributed greatly to the well-being of the nation, today and for future generations.

1.38 pm

Mr. David Martin (Portsmouth, South): I have sat through the debate from the opening speech by my right hon. Friend the Minister, and I was pleased to hear him say how important arts are in enriching society. I endorse the closing remarks of my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) about the importance of the arts to the nation and to all citizens, not just some sections of society.

In that respect, I would quarrel with my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) who gave us the benefit of his wisdom in these matters. It has been suggested by a Minister, who had to take Trappist vows when he became a Minister—he is not in the Chamber—that when my hon. Friend the Member for Littleborough and Saddleworth (Mr. Dickens) becomes Prime Minister and forms his first Administration—something we are promised by various opinion polls in the media—my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington can be the Minister for the Arts. We shall then see a change of direction. We shall see Mr. Average Citizen getting a far greater slice of the action within the arts than my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington asserts is now the position.

Many hon. Members on both sides of the House recognise that the arts are vital to society and are in the finest tradition of any civilization, including Greece, Rome and Egypt. The arts have played an important part in all civilizations and I was pleased to hear my right hon. Friend the Minister underlining their importance in his opening speech. His speech contrasted greatly with that of the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher). The hon. Gentleman said that the Government's record on the arts is miserable and claimed that the Government have done nothing. I considered the Newcastle speech to be full of sound wisdom, but the hon. Gentleman thought it to be an unhappy one.

When listening to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central, having heard my right hon. Friend the Minister, I was reminded of something that Burke said of Sheridan and his style of speaking. Burke said that his style was something between poetry and prose, and better than either. The style of the hon. Gentleman was something between dirge and lament, and worse than both. Much has been done by the Government for the arts that has been entirely positive. There is much to highlight rather than to complain about.

I am pleased to see the right hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot) in his place. I am looking forward to reading his work on Byron. I sat opposite him in the Library the other day when he removed it from an enormous envelope and began to read it himself. I think that he was being far too modest. I am sure that there will be many readers of his work and that he had no need to sit in the Library and read it himself. Perhaps he will give me a signed copy for mentioning it in my speech and seeking to promote its reading.

The right hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent mentioned Byron, and I noted what he said about the ignorance, as he sees it, that is suppressing the celebration of Byron's 200th anniversary. He said that the event may be censored and that perhaps Britain is going through what Macaulay described as one of its periodic fits of morality. I agree with the right hon. Gentleman that that happens. I remember reading about Oscar Wilde's experiences in the 1890s. Even after he had been prosecuted and found guilty of offences, his plays were being shown in London. What did the theatre managers do? They did not take off the plays. Instead, they removed his name from them, and they appeared anonymously from then onwards. Maybe the same sort of thing will happen to Byron. I am sure, however, that, with the handling of the right hon. Gentleman, the reputation of Byron will be firmly re-established in the life of the nation. When we come to the 300th anniversary—with the right hon. Gentleman's longevity he might even be around for that—there may well be a different attitude towards Byron. I value hearing the contributions of the right hon. Gentleman because we are all aware of his civilised and well-read ways, which enable him to make such a significant contribution to our debates. I was privileged to hear the latest offering.

I have mentioned the contribution that the arts make to any civilised society and I have referred to Greece and Rome. The Emperor Tiberius established what was called a controller of pleasures. Perhaps that palm might be carried in the Government somewhere between my hon. Friend the Minister with responsibility for Sport and my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Arts. It will please my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea when I say that the Emperor Tiberius, when talking about taxation, said that a good shepherd sheared his flock but did not flay it. There is no doubt that the marrying of private sponsorship and Government funding must be the way forward, without undue emphasis on either. Without both the Government and the private sector being interested in the future of the arts, we shall not have what we want to see. That applies to London and the provinces. I say that especially bearing in mind the area of Portsmouth that I represent.

Portsmouth has a great future in arts and museums. Its museums also have a great past. The hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Buchan) regards charging for entry to museums as disgraceful, but in Portsmouth there is a charge now for visiting HMS Victory, and the Mary Rose also attracts many visitors. As we have heard, charges have been introduced at the National Maritime museum in London and attendance has increased. I see nothing inimical to attendance in the making of modest charges, which add to the total funding and to the attractions and experience enjoyed by people, young and old, rich and poor, when they go to see the exhibits.

The young are given particular encouragement in the museums of Portsmouth. Little has been said in the debate so far about the encouragement of the young, especially in crafts, decorative arts and furniture making. There is sometimes insufficient support and appreciation of that aspect. I see nothing wrong in charging for exhibitions, but some help is essential to encourage young people, especially nowadays when there is the need to find jobs and to acquire many more skills. Skills in the arts must also be encouraged. At present, we rely on sponsorship and those who organise exhibitions have a constant battle to keep going. There is nothing wrong with that, but arts council grants are still vital. Without overdoing it, funding of that kind helps to promote schemes that we regard as important.

The conservation of buildings will always take up a good deal of the budget. We have inherited many beautiful historic buildings which need to be maintained at all times and it is a constant struggle to do so. In that respect, Portsmouth is no exception. Southsea castle dates from the time of Henry VIII and needs continual attention to keep it in good repair. Talking of the need for sponsorship and advertising to arouse people's interest, before I was elected to Parliament I recall seeing an advertisement in the London Underground encouraging people to visit the Tower of London. It carried a picture of Henry VIII asking for a return ticket to the Tower of London with graffiti underneath it saying, "And a single for the wife." I thought that that was an excellent promotion. We must promote the attractions of Southsea castle and those of other cities, not just those in London. I see no justification for making a distinction between one part of the country and another in terms of the importance of the arts.

I understand that the Arts Council also funds musical events and orchestras. The training of young people is equally important in this respect, and I am glad to see that there is to be increased emphasis on arts and music in our schools as a result of the Government's education reforms. It is extremely important to promote and encourage music. I have not yet heard the harpist playing in the Harcourt Room, but I look forward to the experience. I understand that there are no harpists provided in the House of Lords, perhaps because their Lordships are closer to the eternal harps than most of us are. I also look forward to seeing the promotions of the art festivals and orchestras that the Arts Council is so good at promoting and assisting.

I welcome what my right hon. Friend the Minister said today about helping and promoting the arts, which are important. The right balance has been struck between private sponsorship and Government funding. I hope that the arts will continue to be encouraged and that everyone will understand their importance to the nation.

Dr. Charles Goodson-Wickes (Wimbledon): I apologise to the House for my intermittent appearances in the debate. This was due to a constituency problem.

There is a great artistic tradition in Wimbledon. Wimbledon school of art is recognised nationally and internationally as a centre of excellence in fine art and, more markedly, in theatre design, covering sets and wardrobes. I take special pleasure in seeing the artistic expression in the school reflected in practical applications, but there is some uncertainty about its future funding. In its wisdom, Merton borough council has given the school enormous support over the years, but if it is to fall under the wing of the Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council, I should appreciate an assurance from my right hon. Friend that the school will not lose any independence. There should be no link between funding and the independence of a centre of excellence which I hope will celebrate its centenary next year.

The Polka theatre in Wimbledon is a unique institution. It is a purpose-built theatre for children. We are lucky to have had it for about 10 years. Not only does it put on magnificent performances, but it has been a pioneer in providing artistic stimulation for handicapped children. As handicapped children are vulnerable in their special ways, so the Polka theatre is vulnerable. I hope that, through the Arts Council and other channels, my right hon. Friend will recognise that small really is beautiful, and that I have just mentioned two instances of it in my constituency.

To continue the theatrical theme, over the years I have researched the artistic works of a forebear of mine, George Clint. He was an artist, mainly in the theatrical world, in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. His works grace the walls of the Garrick club. This morning I have seen hon.

[Dr. Charles Goodson-Wickes]

Members wearing that distinctive—even fluorescent—tie. I hope that they appreciate his works. He has been compared favourably with Zoffany in the past.

The point of mentioning George Clint was that I had immense difficulty finding one of his works, entitled "Falstaff and Mistress Ford". As the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks) and I floated down the Thames last night we must have passed the site—the announcement was in The Times today—of Sir John Falstaff's, or, to be historically more correct Sir John Fastog's house. I was told that the painting was owned by the National gallery, but after a long search it decided that it did not have it. I ended up at the Tate gallery, which admitted that it kept the painting. I asked to see it, and the gallery said that it would require notice. Notice was duly given, and some months later I was told that the painting was reposing in a warehouse in Acton.

I have not had the opportunity to talk to my hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Acton (Sir G. Young), so I do not know how large the warehouse is or what is in it, but it worries me to think of how many other paintings that are part of our national heritage, which have either been acquired by the nation of have been left to the nation by benefactors, are hidden from public view. One wonders whether full use is made of what may be undiscovered works of brilliance.

I should be most grateful if my right hon. Friend could say something about the Government's policy on—to use a not very appropriate phrase—recycling works of art. This came to mind when I saw a portrait of King James II in the office of my right hon. Friend the Lord Privy Seal. I suggested that perhaps in the tercentenary of the glorious revolution he would recycle that painting for some other work. I do not think that my right hon. Friend the Lord Privy Seal would have any difficulty in replacing that work of art, but I would very much welcome some sign that he is aware of the problem. He may well be the custodian of a repository of much of our national heritage that is not available to the public.

I endorse the Government's policy of making art more available to the public. I welcome the Government's measures towards that end, and I look forward to my right hon. Friend's response to the more general, and perhaps also the parochial, points that I have raised.

1.56 pm

Mr. Tony Banks (Newham, North-West): One thing on which we are all agreed today is that we must congratulate the Minister on securing a debate on the arts. Even the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks), who has gone for an early bath, would join in those congratulations.

I have been fascinated by the debate, as I always am by arts debates. They are good, they are amusing, in certain respects they are learned, and, of course, they are totally devoid of crowd violence, which makes them a very unusual activity in this place. I was particularly fascinated by the list of places that the Minister had visited—his artistic odyssey. I was sitting there thinking what a lovely job he has and how much we look forward to my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher) being in that position in the not-too-distant future.

I should have liked the Minister to add to that odyssey by visiting my constituency in Newham to see "The Ragged-Trousered Philanthropist" at the Theatre Royal. I invited him to attend that excellent play, which had full audiences throughout the run. I even threw him the inducement of having a vegetable vindaloo—a real East End bum burner—in my constituency, but he declined. He said that he would come along at a later date; I shall hold him to that because we want him to see what we do in the London borough of Newham.

The Minister made great play with the level of Government spending on the arts. Much will depend on how the figures are interpreted, and what elements are included as to whether one considers that it has gone up or down in real terms. I am satisfied that, even with the welcome increase for this year, we are still not quite back to the level of 1979. That cannot be acceptable. It is completely unacceptable to add abolition money. After all, the Government were replacing, after considerable pressure, what they had effectively removed by the abolition of the Greater London council and the metropolitan county councils.

I shall not go over old ground too often, but I must remind the Minister that when I was the arts chair of the GLC, we increased the arts budget fourfold in real terms in fewer years and we would have continued to increase arts expenditure. Of course, what will happen is that the abolition money will effectively disappear as an identifiable part of the Arts Council budget, which means that the arts will lose that much more.

When one comes to look at the figures, everything is relative. We have heard how much money the Minister has won for the arts. I shall not pour scorn on him. I shall not say that that is an appalling indictment of his period in office. We must welcome everything that we can get. However, putting it into perspective, £362 million, which is the budget for the Office of Arts and Libraries for the current year, is about one third of 1 per cent. of the total central Government spending for 1988-89. That is £6·39 per head of the population. When one compares that expenditure with that of West Germany, where it is three times greater, or of France, where it is four times greater, one realises that public investment in the arts in this country does not stand favourable comparison with many other countries.

A number of hon. Members have asked, "Why spend money on the arts?", and different conclusions have been reached. I say that money should be spent on the arts because it is one of the finest forms of public investment that any country can make. I emphasise the word "investment" because it is an investment in the activities of people at their very best, whether as creators or enjoyers of art. We must continue to say "investment" because it is a "good guy" world. It means that we are seeing a return on the money that we put into something. We do not subsidise the arts, we invest in them. We subsidise farmers. We do not hear many complaints from Conservative Members about that subsidy. We subsidise defence, but we invest in education and the arts. I am still waiting for the terminology on public expenditure to be properly addressed in the House.

How is any age remembered? Often the unpleasant reality of everyday life recedes as one gets further from it. The suffering of the poor, the diseases and the wars all recede and we are left with the lasting monuments of any age. The hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr.

Martin) mentioned buildings, but we are also left with the paintings, the sculptures, the music and the literature. Those are the legacies from past ages that we admire. Those are the bases on which we shall be judged. We shall be judged on what we have created within our society. I think that the hon. Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler) touched on that point as well. We shall not be remembered for the obsolete weapons of death and mass destruction; we shall be judged by our art forms.

The hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) plays the court jester in many respects in our arts debates, but he is nevertheless welcome. His muscular approach to the arts is well known. I remember the statement that he made on a television programme about Pavarotti being an overweight Italian—which he has said again today. He said also that the ballet was something for poofters in leotards. That was the level of his contribution on that occasion. He is to the arts what The Sun is to English literature, or what the A-Team is to embroidery.

However, what the hon. Gentleman was saying about selling off art treasures is only a logical extension of the Government's economic policy. I am surprised that he was so quickly rejected by his hon. Friends. It might be that it is only the more enlightened Conservative Members who now confront us, but I am sure that there are many members of the Cabinet who would support the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington in his call for art treasures to be sold off. We are selling off the silver in terms of the socially owned industries. It will only be a matter of time before the Government start ransacking the British Museum to see what else they can sell off. What the hon. Member was saying had a ring of horrible portent.

There is also some truth in what the hon. Member said about the contrasting ways in which we approach public support for different leisure activities. I join hands with him on the question of why we should regard certain aspects of our leisure activities as unworthy of public support, while other activities are worthy.

We must address that issue. In many ways it comes down to the question, "What is art?" That is not just a philosophical question; it is a question of class and economics. The people will sit in judgment in the Arts Council and, in many cases, in local authorities and Ministries, and those who decide what is art and, therefore, what will receive funding, tend to have the values of white middle-class males. In drawing that to our attention, the hon. Gentleman did us a service—even if that was not his intention.

On the point about selling off things, I refer to the excellent speech of my right hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot) who restored my faith in Pope as a poet. Pope had been murdered by the hon. Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel)—to murder a poet is bad enough, but to murder a Pope must be a heinous crime. My right hon. Friend referred to the report on museum charges which has just been published, under the chairmanship of Brian Morris. It states:

"the Minister for the Arts has said that he aims 'to maintain the level of support from public funds [for the arts as a whole], but to encourage subsidised bodies to become more self-reliant in their development and growth'. This is his declared aim. The reality is different. Faced with shortfalls in Government funding, national museums have had to raise money to avoid cutting essential staff. They are having to become self-reliant to keep going."

It is not good enough for the Minister just to wash his hands and say it is a matter for the trustees. The Minister creates the economic climate in which the arts can flourish—he said that himself. Therefore, he must be responsible for the fact that many trustees are being forced to turn to admission charges as the only way in which they can do the sort of things which they know they should be doing. No trustee could sensibly or responsibly want to see a 30 or 40 per cent. reduction in attendances because of the introduction of charges. That must go against everything that every trustee stands for. So why do they do it? The Minister said that it is to improve public facilities. Therefore, they are improving public facilities by reducing the numbers of the public who can enjoy them. As my hon. Friend the Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central said, attendances do not recover. That is unacceptable to us, as are charges for museums. It is a matter of party policy that when in government we shall abolish those charges.

Tourism has been mentioned. The hon. Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) talked about people paying. There is something to be said for having charges for tourists in museums. Perhaps that could be done through some form of tourist tax, such as a bed tax. The money produced could be given to the museums and art galleries in the form of a subvention from Government. Perhaps the Minister will consider that when he is talking to some of his colleagues.

I also agree with my right hon. Friend the Member for Blaenau Gwent about the Minister's use of "welfare state" as a pejorative term, which was highly obnoxious to us. This mean-minded and pernicious Government are not only trying to dismantle the welfare state, but to turn the word "welfare" into a pejorative term. I do not feel intimidated by the state. I see the state as "us" acting collectively. That is what the state should be. It is not an alien body to be hated or despised or dismantled. The Government's position is equivocal on this because on the one hand the state is held up as a creature which is alien to us all and which is not acting in our best interests; but on the other hand, the powers of the state are being increased and centralised by the Government all the time.

I want the state to spend our money and our taxes on a wide range of activities. I want more of my taxes to be spent on education, housing, health and the arts, and less on defence. It is absolutely right that the state, which, in this respect is central Government plus the local authorities, has taken over as a major patron of the arts from the private patrons of the past. One thing that makes that patronage so important is that it is disinterested, in the best sense of that word. Much private sponsorship is personally aligned to the wishes and the tastes of the board or the chairman of the board or the person who, when taking decisions about the level of business sponsorship, is looking to see whether there will be a good return for the company in terms of PR, image, or free seats for its clients.

We are not opposed to business sponsorship. We do not have any ideological objections to it, as many Conservative Members have towards state sponsorship of the arts, but we are sceptical about the figures quoted. I have written to Colin Tweedy, who does an excellent job at ASBA, and asked for more information because, if the Government are to rely more and more on business sponsorship and quote such sponsorship as a possible golden lifeline for the arts, we need to know whether those figures are accurate.

I very much doubt that those figures are accurate because I do not believe that the Minister can put his hand on his heart and say that he knows for certain that the money claimed to be raised through business sponsorship amounts to a particular sum. It is like invisible exports. They were suddenly revised upwards, but, as they were invisible, it is almost impossible to prove whether they are there, although they become convenient when trying to balance the trade figures. That is what the Minister has been doing with regard to business sponsorship for the funding of the arts.

We welcome the Minister's announcement of the 8 per cent. increase in grant to the Arts Council for 1988-89, but it still falls 21 per cent. short of the figure claimed by the council as necessary to meet the needs of its clients at an acceptable level. Three-year funding means 3 per cent. next year and 3 per cent. the year after, unless the Government can work economic miracles. Although they might claim to do so, I can assure Conservative Members that no miracles are being wrought at present.

We live in a candy-floss society. When North sea oil runs out, we will be revealed as the banana monarchy we have become as a result of the Government's economic policies. The 3 per cent. levels of inflation for the next two years do not appear to be realistic, so there will be real cuts for the next two years. Three-year funding is not very helpful if one knows that it will be cut.

The impact of Government cuts on regional arts associations has been severe, when inflation is taken into account. Greater London Arts has had its Arts Council grant cut by 1·8 per cent. It has lost £600,000 in the past two years. It is no good saying that that is a matter for the Arts Council, just as charges are a matter for museum trustees, because the Minister determines the overall budget and must therefore be responsible for the specific decisions that stem from that budget. He cannot duck his responsibilities.

Forty-seven GLA arts organisations have lost their grant this year. The increase for Northern Arts is only 0·6 per cent., which is, in effect, a cut. Merseyside has received an increase of only 2·2 per cent., which is also a real cut. The Council of Regional Arts Associations has calculated that, if the Arts Council is serious in its intention to bring the regions up to the existing levels of London as a minimum acceptable standard, there is an identifiable gap of some £42 million.

The hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) made an excellent speech. It was so good that he has now been promoted to the post of the Minister's Parliamentary Private Secretary. That must be the most rapid piece of political promotion that I have ever seen. I have myself suffered a self-inflicted demotion within the past 24 hours, and am surprised to find myself still on the Front Bench. The hon. Member for Battersea referred to the position of the national companies, particularly English National Opera, which is not greatly favoured by the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington. It has suffered a 25 per cent. cut since 1979, while the national theatre has suffered a 13 per cent. cut since that date. As has been said, the building housing the National theatre is hideous both to look at and to work in. That should be taken into account when the Minister determines levels of grant for the national companies.

We have heard many excellent contributions today and I must mention that made by my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Buchan) who spoke about broadcasting. This is an arts debate, but broadcasting is the most important medium for the arts and for the conveyance of information. We are aware just how powerful the arts can be if combined with television. "Cathy Come Home" said more about homelessness than all the political speeches bound together in one fat volume. "The Boys from the Black Stuff" said more about unemployment than any political speech delivered from either Dispatch Box, or any political broadcast.

When we talk about the arts, it is important to recognise the role of broadcasting. We must keep broadcasting free from the dead hand of Government censorship—the new Broadcasting Standards Council—which has been imposed by the wishes of Big Mother in No. 10 in her determination to make the BBC as objective and impartial as The Sun and the Daily Mail.

My hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South was absolutely right when he said that there was a conflict in Government thinking. The Government talk about maintaining broadcasting standards and at the same time they opt for deregulation. That, if anything, will guarantee a falling off in standards.

There are many other things that I should like to say, but I have enjoyed myself by listening to the excellent, if somewhat lengthy, speeches from my hon. Friends and from some Conservative Members. This has been a good debate and I am glad that I have had the opportunity to take part.

The Minister has said that he wants to create a climate in which the arts can flourish. That is fine for him, but the climate that has been created by the Government is one of intolerance and bigotry. That makes it difficult for the arts to flourish, notwithstanding any increase in grant. The Minister is a member of a cynical Government, but I would not wish him to have as his epitaph Oscar Wilde's definition of a cynic:

"A man who knows the price of everything and the value of nothing".

2.16 pm

Mr. Luce: With the leave of the House, I shall reply to the debate.

The debate has lasted for five hours and has illustrated the widespread and growing interest of the House in the arts and our heritage. I enjoyed the speech of the hon. Member for Newham, North-West (Mr. Banks), which was sparkling and entertaining, in contrast to that made by the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central (Mr. Fisher), for whom I have great respect. I recommend that in future the hon. Gentleman takes an anti-depressant pill before he speaks. He always speaks with such gloom about everything, but at the same time he manages to accept, perhaps grudgingly, that good things are happening in the arts world and to our heritage. The hon. Gentleman likes to say that such good things have nothing to do with me, and he likes to put all the blame on me. I do not mind that, as long as he accepts that the arts are flourishing and expanding. That is all I mind about.

I believe that my hon. Friend the Member for Battersea (Mr. Bowis) put his finger on it when he said that what really matters is to create a climate in which the arts can flourish, whatever the Government. The arts should be as self-reliant as possible and should be independent of any Government. The freedom of artistic expression is at the heart of success in the arts. The less dependent the arts are on one source of funding, the better. That is at the centre of the Government's approach to the arts.

I shall try to respond to the points that have been made in the debate. I appreciate that in the time left I shall be unable to respond to every point, and should I fail to do so I shall try to write to hon. Members.

In fairness to the hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, Central I shall reply to his argument about core funding for the performing arts institutions. He said that, in line with Arts Council policy, such funding is only just keeping in line with inflation and that sometimes it is below it.

This financial year there was an increase of more than £11·5 million over last year to the Arts Council, and the hon. Member for Newham, North-West was good enough to welcome that 8 per cent. increase. A substantial part of that money has been earmarked for certain purposes. The hon. Gentleman may not agree with some of those purposes, for example, some money is to be spent on touring. It is right that excellence in the arts through touring should be made available to as many people as possible.

Mr. Fisher indicated assent.

Mr. Luce: I am glad to have the hon. Gentleman's agreement. We are seeing an increase in touring activity.

Some of that money is devoted to the new concept of incentive funding by which, rather than penalising organisations which become more self-reliant by their own efforts, we are seeking to use an element—not a large element—of taxpayers' money to reward success and encourage self-reliance. That is good for the arts and it is right that those who succeed should get some acknowledgement through taxpayers' support.

A third sum has been earmarked for what is described as new developments. This is a decision of the Arts Council. It may be the right decision, and it is for the Arts Council to make that judgment. When taking account of what is happening in the performing arts it is important to realise that these sums are available to encourage particular developments and that all organisations which do well and provide the highest standards of excellence in the arts deserve to receive some acknowledgement through one of these three earmarked sums.

The hon. Gentleman highlighted the important role of local authorities, and I recognise that. They are playing an increasingly important part in arts funding, and I welcome that. The national campaign for the arts recently produced a report on this subject and found that this funding goes across the party spectrum. Some Conservative-controlled authorities and some Socialist-controlled authorities provide good support, whereas some from either side do not give adequate support. Where local authorities have arts or heritage organisations in their area which play an important role for their ratepayers, they should at least give some support. I am not advocating vast increases in sums of money, but they should acknowledge that role.

A debate on the arts without a contribution from my hon. Friend the Member for Hayes and Harlington (Mr. Dicks) would be lacking. As always, he made a colourful contribution, speaking with firm conviction. He chides me for spending too much taxpayers' money on the arts when more should be spent on social services and argues for a continuing debate on how much priority should be given to certain public services and how much taxpayers' money should be allocated. With all these arts debates—this is the third one in which I have taken part—I am coming to believe that my hon. Friend is something of a national institution and that he needs to be preserved. Perhaps I should suggest to the Arts Council that a grant be allocated to ensure that he is preserved. He makes tremendous contributions and I welcome his view that the arts organisations should become as self-reliant as possible in their own interests.

My hon. Friend the Member for Warrington, South (Mr. Butler), who gave notice that he could not be present for my reply, made several meaty points. I agree with his encouragement for endowment funding and his encouragement for more giving. He drew attention to the payroll giving scheme and the fact that its threshold has been increased to £240, and spoke of his disappointment that not enough had come to the arts in that way. I echo that view. I hope that more and more people will, in the current positive climate of lower income tax and higher standards of living, see that that is a good mechanism for giving more to the arts world. I support his view on that.

My hon. Friend talked about the importance of our surroundings and architecture. It has been noticeable in the past few years how much stronger public interest is in our surroundings and environment. We should all welcome that. His Royal Highness The Prince of Wales has played an important role in stimulating that kind of interest, and that can only be good for the country.

The right hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Foot) is in every sense a true House of Commons man and has been here for almost every minute of the debate. He did not appear at all times to be attending fully to every speech, but he has been here throughout the debate, as he always is for arts debates, and I warmly welcome that.

The right hon. Gentleman made some interesting points and said that I should take a stronger interest in the concept of a Commonwealth Open university. I listened with great interest to the right hon. Gentleman's speech and noted his view of the important role that is played by the English language. I shall consult my colleagues who would have some responsibility for implementing the idea that he has put forward.

I listened carefully also to what the right hon. Gentleman said about the museums and galleries report. I take the report very seriously. I have read it, and I shall read it again and study the points that are made in it. I value the role played by the Museums and Galleries Commission and realise that it is important for us to debate this issue.

Some hon. Members were highly selective in the way in which they picked out certain aspects of the report. It is easy for hon. Members to do that. It is an objective report and highlights some of the problems that we face about conservation and storage space. I am glad that the Government have been able to provide a new storage building, costing £11 million in taxpayers' money, in Blyth road, Hammersmith. It will help to overcome some of the storage problems of the Victoria and Albert museum, the British Museum and some of our other national museums.

My hon. Friend the Member for Battersea made a most interesting and stimulating speech. I can reassure him about the Horniman and Geffrye museums. In another place this week it was made clear that the Government will provide financial assistance to these museums. In due course the Office of Arts and Libraries will take over responsibility for them. However, the method of running them has still to be worked out. We envisage the establishment of charitable trusts to help the museums in their tasks.

My hon. Friend the Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Martin) made an interesting speech. I welcome the fact that he thought that we should give more encouragement to young people in the arts. I draw his attention to the enterprise allowance scheme, which has done a great deal to encourage people to set up their own businesses. A growing number of artists are taking advantage of that allowance, and as a result many are able to become self-reliant and to practise their talents and skills.

My hon. Friend the Member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes) drew attention to the range of facilities in Wimbledon, such as the Wimbledon school of art and the Polka theatre, and I am grateful to him for doing so. He also drew to our attention the matter of national treasures. I can only repeat what I said earlier, that I shall continue to give the highest priority to ensuring accessibility by the nation to our works of art. I shall do that by a variety of means.

My hon. Friend the Member for Twickenham (Mr. Jessel) made an entertaining speech and fully advertised the celebrations tomorrow to mark the tercentenary of Alexander Pope. He also drew my attention to a painting entitled "The View from Richmond Hill". Representatives of the Government art collection fund are in touch with Marble hill about that and it should be possible to arrange a loan of the picture. I shall take a personal interest to see what I can do to help.

The hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) made an interesting speech about Liverpool. I look forward to attending the opening on Tuesday of the Tate of the north. This will be an important event for Liverpool and will make a great contribution to the regeneration of the area. I was very glad that he proclaimed the importance of the facilities of Liverpool, and it should do more, as Glasgow does, to get across to the nation what it has to offer in the way of heritage and the arts. If it did that, the regeneration of Liverpool would take place more quickly.

My hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich (Mr. Bowden) made an excellent speech and proclaimed the importance of self-reliance in the arts, which I entirely endorse.

The hon. Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Buchan) spoke feelingly about the role that Glasgow has to play. I am glad that Glasgow took the initiative in gaining the status of cultural city for Europe 1990. It deserves the credit, and has many facilities to offer. A great regeneration, artistic and economic, is already taking place——

It being half-past Two o'clock, the motion for the Adjournment of the House lapsed, without Question put.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Ordered,

That, at any sitting at which Motions relating to Short Speeches or Public Petitions may be made by a Minister of the Crown, such motions may be proceeded with, though opposed, for one and a half hours after the first of them has been entered upon; and if proceedings thereon have not been previously disposed of, any Amendments to the first such Motion which may have been selected by Mr. Speaker may then be moved, the Question thereon shall be put forthwith, and Mr. Speaker shall then put successively the Question on the said Motion and any Questions necessary to dispose of the other such Motion, which may then be made, and of any Amendments thereto which may have been selected by him and which may then be moved.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

Private Members' Bills

2.30 pm

Mr. Ray Powell (Ogmore): On a point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. It is distressing that the Government are not prepared to allow time for private Members' Bills to be discussed in the House. As you know, Madam Deputy Speaker, we wait quite a long——

Madam Deputy Speaker (Miss Betty Boothroyd): Order. I know the anxiety of the hon. Member for Ogmore (Mr. Powell), but this is not a matter for the Chair. It is a matter that must now be pursued with the Leader of the House through the usual channels. I cannot allow the hon. Gentleman to abuse the Standing Orders of the House by continually raising points of order on this matter. I ask him to pursue his object through the usual channels.

Mr. Powell: Further to that point of order, Madam Deputy Speaker. I respect what you say, because the Chair advises us. When we try to get a ten-minute Bill discussed, and when it has the support of both sides of the House, it should be discussed on a Friday——

Madam Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. Gentleman is charming and wily. I shall not repeat what I have already said; I am sure that he will see it in the Official Report on Monday, and I can take no further points of order on this.

Travelling People (Greenwich)

Motion made, and Question proposed, That this House do now adjourn.—[Mr. Dorrell.]

2.31 pm

Mr. John Cartwright (Woolwich): I am grateful for this opportunity to raise once again the intolerable nuisance being suffered by too many of my constituents as a result of the establishment of illegal caravan camps in their midst. This has been a long-running saga thoughout my 13½ years as the hon. Member for Woolwich. The first item in my thick file on the subject is dated 17 March 1975.

I make it clear at the outset that Greenwich council has not been unsympathetic to the needs of genuine gipsies and travellers. During my period as leader of the council in the early 1970s, we provided a site for about 54 caravans on what has since come to be called the Thistlebrook site in Abbey Wood. That site was planned in conjunction with the Gipsy Council and cost more than £300,000. Since then, more than another £100,000 has been spent on clearing the area, which had been contaminated by some of the residents' heavy metal breaking activities.

Although there were a number of travelling families living on the land before the official site was set up, Greenwich council has more than met its obligation under the Caravan Sites Act 1968. It is therefore a designated authority, which gives it the right to take legal action against travellers establishing themselves on the roadside or on publicly or privately owned land in the borough.

Such invasions of caravans occurred rarely in the early 1970s, and mainly in the Abbey Wood area. They were usually brought to an end by legal action after a few weeks. However, as the progressive development of Thamesmead opened up extensive areas of land that had until then been securely fenced off, large-scale caravan encampments became a more regular problem. Nevertheless, there was effective co-operation between Greenwich council, the GLC, which owned Thamesmead, and Thames Water, which also had substantial land holdings in the area.

The necessary legal action was begun as soon as the caravans arrived; it took time to complete and was reasonably effective, but sadly all that changed in about 1982. New political administrations in Greenwich town hall and the GLC adopted a dramatically different attitude to the traveller encampments. Legal action was regularly delayed for months on end, with the result that Thamesmead roadside verges were almost permanently disfigured by caravans. At times, there were more than 100 caravans at Thamesmead—about one fifth of all the unauthorised caravans in the whole of Greater London.

When Thamesmead Town Ltd. assumed full responsibility for the development, the position improved substantially. The impression of an open-door policy towards travellers that was built up during the GLC days was rapidly removed, and the area is now clear of caravans. Even Greenwich council, which previously proposed to provide a second permanent site for travellers in the borough, now seems to have lost some of its enthusiasm. Legal action has been taken to remove illegal encampments, even if not always as swiftly as my constituents would have wished. However, we are now faced with one of the worst cases of illegal occupation in the whole sorry history of the problems.

Towards the end of August 1987, I received complaints from local residents that, once again, travellers' caravans had moved onto the empty land alongside the southern outfall sewer at Church Manorway, Abbey Wood. That site is owned by the London borough of Greenwich, and it has been a regular target for illegal encampments in recent years.

The council's solicitor started legal proceedings that were due to be heard on 16 September 1987, when he intended to apply for a possession order against the travellers. However, on 15 September, he was requested by the deputy leader of the council to adjourn the proceedings. Apparently, that request resulted from discussions that the deputy leader had undertaken with the travellers. The situation was then considered at a special meeting of the relevant council committees on 1 October.

At that meeting, the district housing manager reported that he "had been inundated with calls and complaints from frightened and concerned tenants in the area."

Local allotment holders were also calling for action to stop trespassing on their nearby plots. There were complaints of "damage by horses, dogs, travellers' children, and verbal and physical abuse."

The meeting authorised the reinstatement of the legal action to remove the travellers from the land. Unfortunately, by the time the matter came before the courts on 29 March 1988, the council's case had been adversely affected by a decision of the Appeal Court relating to its official Thistlebrook site. The Appeal Court judgment held that all those living on the Thistlebrook site were long-stay residents and therefore not persons of a nomadic lifestyle. In effect, that meant that Thistlebrook was not a gipsy site under the terms of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 and that the council was not fulfilling the requirements of the Act. The Court of Appeal also held that Thistlebrook residents were protected by the Mobile Homes Act 1983.

Despite the Court of Appeal's decision, the council retains its designation under the 1968 Act, as it was granted by the Secretary of State for the Environment. In theory, therefore, the council could try to evict illegal travellers through the magistrates courts, using its powers as a designated authority. However, in the Church Manorway case, the travellers sought an adjournment of the council's action, to enable them to apply to the High Court for a judicial review, on the ground that it was unreasonable for the council to evict them when it had been held by the Appeal Court to be in breach of its statutory duty to provide a site for people of a nomadic lifestyle. The judge granted such an adjournment. We do not yet know whether the travellers have been granted leave to apply for judicial review. Nevertheless, the council believes that similar applications will be made in respect of travellers' camps in the borough, making it difficult or impossible to move them.

The implications of the Court of Appeal's decision in that case are extremely worrying for Greenwich council. It would require it to clear the Thistlebrook site and then to re-let it to travellers, ensuring that they stay on the site for no more than six months at a time. That is certain to be a difficult and lengthy business, particularly as the Court of Appeal appears to have stated that travellers would have the protection of the Mobile Homes Act. The alternative would be for Greenwich council to provide a totally new site for a minimum of 15 caravans, to be managed on a short-stay basis. Not surprisingly, the council stated that neither alternative is in any way attractive.

Every other local authority in London and in many other parts of the country apparently operates its caravan sites on the same basis as Greenwich. Therefore, the impact of the complex legal decision will be felt on a national rather than purely local basis, and the whole thrust of the 1968 legislation could be seriously undermined.

Greenwich has sought leave to appeal to the House of Lords, but even if leave is granted, it will take time to resolve the issue and it will add substantially to the overall bill that Greenwich ratepayers must bear as a direct result of the activities of travellers who seem extremely reluctant to travel.

While the law takes its slow and stately course, my constituents in the vicinity of the Church Manorway camp are suffering intolerable nuisance. There are now at least 30 caravans, together with vans and lorries, parked on high ground overlooking the neighbouring houses. Large quantities of rubbish and litter of all kinds have been strewn down the side of the slope. Lorries regularly fly-tip massive quantities of rubble in the immediate area. Some of the travellers regularly burn copper wire and lorry tires. The resulting cloud of acrid black smoke covers the entire neighbourhood.

Worst of all, there are absolutely no sanitary facilities on the site and the standard of hygiene displayed by some of the travellers gives grave offence to many of the neighbouring residents. As one of my constituents put it to me in a letter this week:

"The adults and children just drop their pants and go to the toilet where ever . . . that is just going too far, it's disgusting."

This has been going on since last August. As the warmer weather arrives, there are further complaints about flies, obnoxious smells and frequent sightings of rats feeding on the accumulated piles of filth and rubbish. The concern about the public health hazard is understandable. It is monstrous that we should have such a shanty town established with such primitive conditions in inner London in 1988.

The complaints do not relate only to the appalling impact of the encampment on the immediate environment. There are also cases of deliberate vandalism and destruction. The bowling green of the nearby Royal Arsenal sports club has been systematically dug up. Bricks and bottles have been strewn over the playing surfaces, and the groundsman has been physically threatened. It is unreasonable to expect residents to put up with such behaviour for months on end, while the courts argue out the finer points of the law.

Even Greenwich council has now been forced to consider using the Public Order Act 1986 to move some of the caravans that are now on allotment land. However, there are apparently difficulties about attempting to use these public order powers against the main encampment, since the travellers claim that they were given permission to stay on the land by the council's deputy leader.

What makes me particularly angry about this issue is that most of those who support the travellers' cause do so from a distance. They do not have to put up with the sort of conditions that my constituents in Abbey Wood and Thamesmead have regularly had to endure. I cannot help feeling that if travellers established themselves on Blackheath, or similar pleasant middle class areas, a way to move them would soon be discovered.

Nor is there any truth in the suggestion that the Thamesmead development has deprived travellers of their traditional camping sites. Before it was opened up for building, this land was occupied by the Woolwich arsenal, and it was totally secure. Even if they had been able to get into the land, the travellers would certainly not have been camping in between the remains of guns, shells, explosives and all the other military hardware that littered the land.

As the House will understand, this is an issue on which I feel strongly on behalf of my hard-pressed constituents. I have raised the general principle with successive Ministers who have had the misfortune to include responsibility for gipsies and travellers within their departmental briefs. I have raised it in the Chamber, in written questions, in correspondence and in personal meetings with Ministers, and, I must confess, with little obvious result.

The traditional attitude of Ministers was summed up by the present Secretary of State for the Environment in a written reply last year. After yet another review of the legislation, he told an expectant world:

"The Government have decided that there should be no amendment of the legislation at this stage, although we shall continue to keep the position under review."—[Official Report, 6 February 1987; Vol. 109, c. 856.]

This is my first encounter with the hon. Member for Broxbourne (Mrs. Roe), the present Minister to deal with the matter. I hope that she will not offer that time-honoured ministerial formula, and instead will offer us some ideas as to how we can sort out the legal catch 22 in which Greenwich and many other local authorities seem to be trapped as a result of the Appeal Court ruling. Most important of all, I hope that she will offer some message of sympathy and some encouragement and hope to my Abbey Wood constituents, who have unfairly been asked to put up with far too much for far too long.

The Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for the Environment (Mrs. Marion Roe): I am grateful to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) for raising the issue of travellers' encampments in the Greenwich area. I know that this is a subject close to his heart and one that he has raised before in the House, in correspondence and elsewhere.

I entirely share the hon. Gentleman's concern for the residents of Greenwich and for the need to ensure that public order is maintained and the law upheld. It is common ground between us that gipsies, like everyone else, must comply with the law. I hope that it is also common ground that the way forward is through the provision of adequate sites for gipsies. The Government are fully committed to this approach.

The hon. Member will recall that in February last year my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced his conclusions, following the review of policy for the provision of gipsy sites. He concluded, after a careful examination of responses to a consultation letter and after considering the analysis of these responses by an independent adviser, Professor Gerald Wibberley, that the way forward was to continue with the present legislative duty to provide sites coupled with the additional controls available through designation.

I think it might be helpful if I were to outline briefly what the law has to say on the subject of gipsies. County, London borough and metropolitan district councils have a duty under section 6 of the Caravan Sites Act 1968 to provide sites for gipsies residing in or resorting to their areas. For London boroughs and metropolitan districts, this duty is restricted to provision for up to 15 caravans at a time. However, in a number of London boroughs, such as Greenwich, there are more than that number of gipsies who have by long custom been encamped in these areas. Where this is so, and authorities can arrange for their accommodation, they should do so.

When my right hon. Friend can be satisfied that adequate provision exists for the accommodation of gipsies in a particular area, or that in all the circumstances it is not necessary or expedient to make adequate provision, he can consider an application from the local authorities, which have a statutory duty to provide accommodation, that the area should be designated under the provisions of the Caravan Sites Act 1968. Designation gives the authorities greater power to control unauthorised camping by gipsies in their area.

We recognise that there may in certain cases be a problem of interpretation of the statutory definition of gipsies. The Act defines them as "persons of nomadic habit of life, whatever their race or origin."

Local authorities have generally been able to decide who meets this statutory definition for site provision, but the definition is wide and there is increasing concern that other groups may seek the benefits which the Act provides. We are examining this, and it may be that some further clarification will be desirable. I have to stress, however, that the onus of deciding who is a gipsy for the purposes of the statutory duty will have to rest with the local authorities themselves, in the light of the statutory definition.

The London borough of Greenwich is a designated authority which therefore enjoys additional powers for controlling unauthorised camping by gipsies. Where the council owns the land on which the encampment is situated it may apply to the county court for a possession order. As a designated authority the council may also initiate proceedings under the 1968 Act in the magistrates' court to deal with unauthorised camping and secure the removal of unlawful encampments. Where caravans are sited on highways land, the council may anyway take action under the Highways Act.

The Government consider that these powers should be sufficient to deal with unauthorised sites. It must, however, be for the council or landowner concerned to consider which specific legal remedy is most appropriate to deal with a given situation. If local residents are not satisfied with the action being taken by their council, it is open to them to press the council, to refer the matter to the local ombudsman, or to take legal advice. It is not a matter for the Government.

The hon. Gentleman mentioned the use of the Public Order Act 1986. As he will be aware, this Act gives the police powers, acting on a complaint, in certain circumstances to remove trespassers from land. Although the Public Order Act has on occasion been used to deal with gipsies, he will know that it was enacted to deal with the problem of large hippy convoys, and not with gipsies. Greenwich as a designated authority has available to it the various powers that I have just described, and I imagine that the council may well consider it more appropriate to use the special provisions of the Caravan Sites Act, which was framed with gipsies in mind rather than resort to the Public Order Act. I should stress that this is a decision for the council, not for the Government.

I recognise the difficulties that exist over the provision of sites in some areas, including Greenwich, but we should also recognise the progress that has been made. At the beginning of the year there were, countrywide, about 258 local authority sites providing approximately 4,250 pitches for gipsy caravans. Additionally, we believe that there are 2,300 caravans on private sites. We recognise, however, that there is still a need for more than 3,000 pitches countrywide to accommodate the considerable number of gipsy caravans for which there is as yet no legal provision.

The Government have given, and will continue to give, extensive assistance to authorities in the performance of their statutory duties under the caravan Acts. We make 100 per cent. Exchequer grant available for sites provided by local authorities, and we have set aside £6 million for this purpose in the current financial year. We have issued advice to local authorities in circulars and in research reports, as a result of which there is a considerable weight of advice available on the location, design and management of sites, as well as on the promotion of private site initiatives.

We supplement formal advice with regular and informal liaison between the Department and individual local authorities, as they may require, to help them in the fulfilment of their statutory duty. In short, we have a legislative package which balances a duty to provide sites with the availability of special controls on unauthorised camping. We try to operate it sensibly and we consider that it can be made to work.

The hon. Member may like to know that the Department has had discussions with Greenwich officials as to the availability of grant for the existing authorised travellers' site at Thistlebrook. We understand that the council has since been considering possible alternative sites in the borough, which would, however, have to be acceptable to the community. The offer of financial assistance stands. It is for the council to take it up.

I understand that the council may be concerned to know where it stands with regard to the provision of gipsy sites in the light of the recent Court of Appeal judgment in the case of London Borough of Greenwich v. Powell and another. The judgment as it stands clearly has some implications which we shall need to consider and which might have repercussions for gipsy site policy in a wider context.

I understand that the London borough of Greenwich has petitioned for leave to appeal against the judgment and that it has been agreed that there is to be an oral hearing of the petition, but I understand that no date has yet been fixed for the hearing. Clearly, we must await the outcome of the petition. Until we have it, there is probably not very much that we can or should do in the matter, other than to give careful consideration in cases coming for decision —for example, planning appeals and applications—to the circumstances of the individuals concerned.

It would be entirely wrong for me to comment at present upon the likely effects of the Court of Appeal judgment. I remind the House that that judgment was in fact directed towards the question of security of tenure under the provisions of the Mobile Homes Act. The merits of that question happen to turn on the question of gipsy status of the occupants of the council's site and, by extension, on the status of the site itself. So far as I can detect, local authorities are in general continuing to approach their statutory responsibilities to provide gipsy sites much as before. The problem of unauthorised camping continues to require remedial action, and it continues to be the Government's view that the provision of authorised caravan sites is the best way to provide the remedy.

Concern has been expressed about the eligibility of the borough to continue to enjoy the status of a designated area under the Caravan Sites Act 1968. I assure hon. Members that there is no intention on the part of my Department to take action to disturb the present position. As I said, the important thing is to maintain the status quo until we know the outcome of the petition to appeal. We must then consider what, if any, action is necessary. Hon. Members may be assured that it will be our primary concern to ensure that any action taken is fair to all concerned and continues to tackle the problem of gipsy accommodation need and unauthorised camping.

The hon. Member referred to unauthorised encampments in Greenwich borough. I understand that in the case of Church Manor way, the council has instituted proceedings in the county court, but they have been adjourned by the court following an application by the defendants to the High Court for a judicial review of the council's decision to evict. The council has considered whether in the circumstances it should seek an alternative legal remedy, but it has been advised to pursue its existing action. I appreciate the concern of the hon. Member and local residents, but this matter is wholly within the competence of the local authority. Nor would it be appropriate for me to comment on matters that are before the courts.

I understand that the council has succeeded in obtaining eviction orders in relation to an unauthorised site at Brocklebank. It is also investigating complaints about a site at Bramshot avenue. A major issue here appears likely to be the ownership of the land.

The hon. Member criticised Greenwich council's handling of some of these matters. I appreciate the feeling of frustration among local residents if they see no action taken to deal with long-standing nuisances. The council would doubtless maintain that it has had success in dealing with some unauthorised sites. It has initiated appropriate proceedings elsewhere and cannot be held responsible for difficulties that have arisen on legal proceedings. It would not be appropriate for me to express views on those matters. They arise at local level. As I explained, the council is the locally elected body, which is answerable to its electors for its actions.

The Government's role has been to issue general guidance to authorities about their powers and duties; to offer informal advice, if desired; and to make available 100 per cent. Exchequer grant for authorised sites provided by authorities. I fully appreciate the hon. Member's concern about difficulties that have arisen in his constituency, but I trust that he will accept my contention that adequate provisions for dealing with problems exist. It must be for the local community and, if necessary, the courts to resolve them.

Question put and agreed to.

Adjourned accordingly at three minutes to Three o'clock.

DEFENCE

Defence Estimates

Sir Antony Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to publish the "Statement on Defence Estimates 1988"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I intend to publish this year's Statement on the Defence Estimates on Tuesday 17 May.

Transmitter Station (Glengarry Forest)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the environmental effects of the proposed ELF transmitter station at Glengarry forest.

Mr. Sainsbury: A full assessment of the environmental effects of the proposed trial ELF transmitter station at Glengarry forest will be made as part of the preparation of a notice of proposed development which, on present planning, is unlikely to be submitted to the Highland regional council before the autumn of this year.

RAF Caerwent

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list details of ammunition carried through the Newport, West constituency from the Caerwent base to Newport docks during 1987 and planned for 1988;

(2) if he will list the total tonnage of ammunition stored at and transported to and from RAF Caerwent in 1986 and 1987 and planned for 1988.

Mr. Freeman: No. It is not our practice to provide details of the storage of ammunition at particular sites or the movements of ammunition to and from these sites.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will take steps in the interests of improved security to increase the proportion of ammunition moved from Caerwent by rail.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 18 April 1988 at column 335.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the financial savings made or planned at the Caerwent base as a result of substituting of civilian escorts for Ministry of Defence police, reductions in the complement of Ministry of Defence police and new contracts awarded to private transport contractors.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 26 April 1988 at column 76. Competitive bids are sought for the transport contracts at RAF Caerwent and the costs involved are commercially confidential.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the complement of Ministry of Defence police at RAF Caerwent for 1986, 1987 and 1988 and the planned future complement.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our practice to provide information of the sort requested.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities are available at RAF Caerwent to breathalyse ammunition lorry drivers.

Mr. Freeman: There are no facilities available at RAF Caerwent to breathalyse ammunition lorry drivers.

Ammunition (Newport Lorry Fire)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ammunition was being carried on the lorry that caught fire on the M4 in Newport on 30 January.

Mr. Freeman: It is not our practice to provide information of this sort.

Submarines (Reactors and Radioactive Waste Disposal)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what options his Department has considered for the disposal of reactors and radioactive waste material following the decommissioning of nuclear-powered submarines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The options which have been considered for disposal of the reactor machinery are sea disposal of the entire submarine, land burial of the intact reactor compartment and cutting the reactor plant into small pieces for storage and eventual disposal in a deep site yet to be developed. No decisions have yet been taken about which option should be chosen. The safety and environmental implications of these options will, of course, form part of the Government's deliberations. Any other radioactive waste material will be disposed of in the normal way to Drigg, if suitable for shallow land disposal, or stored pending the development of a deep disposal facility. The spent uranium fuel will be sent to BNFL Sellafield for storage.

Armed Forces (Allowances Review)

Sir Geoffrey Pattie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the review of armed forces allowances has yet been completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: We have carried out a comprehensive review of all armed forces allowances to ensure that they are up to date, cost effective, and appropriate to the requirements of service life. Most aspects of the review have now been completed, although some further work will be required on service in London, the conclusions on which will be announced by October 1988, and on certain aspects of service in overseas stations.

The outcome provides significant improvements in measures to assist service men when they are relocated. These will encourage and support the individual service housing policies, which have been carefully reviewed. New disturbance allowances rates will benefit all married personnel. In addition, and in recognition of the increasing number of service house owners, new measures will greatly assist the service man who serves accompanied and who occupies his own accommodation. He will now receive compensation at a much higher level than hitherto for the costs of buying and selling which arise from service postings. Moreover, subject to evaluation of all the changes over the next three years, I envisage a further substantial increase in the limit on reimbursement of legal and similar fees from April 1991.

The new package also goes a long way to removing differences of treatment between married and single personnel and there will be significant improvements in the allowances for seagoers, including help to rejoin their families. At the same time, some existing benefits which are less appropriate to modern service conditions will be phased out. The simplification of certain allowances will produce some savings in administrative costs. Taken with the recently announced armed forces pay review award we believe that we shall have attractive arrangements for modern circumstances which will aid recruitment and retention, and meet, to a much greater extent, the aspirations of service men and their families.

Relocation. A package is being introduced to encourage mobility. For the house owner-occupier aged 30 or over—25 or over in the Royal Navy for allowances in this area—this will allow refunds of up to £2,500 to compensate for the expense of buying and selling a house on a new posting of more than 50 miles from his or her current residence. From 1 October 1988 refunds of tenancy agreement and repossession costs will be available to married and single personnel once in every 12 months period. This refund will be available to single personnel within the appropriate age limits.

Rates of disturbance allowance will be increased very substantially and, in addition to being paid to married personnel, it will, for the first time, be paid also to single personnel aged 30 or over who reside in private accommodation. The new rates for married personnel will be:

Move	Officers £	Other Ranks £
Into private accommodation (first occupation)	1,200	900
Into private accommodation (reoccupation)	689	517
Into MQs (on posting)	689	517
Into MQs (same duty station)	310	223

Single personnel will be eligible for 75 per cent. of the married private accommodation rates. The child element of the allowance will be £95 for each eligible child.

Assisted house purchase. The resettlement and 50 plus assisted house purchase scheme will cease to be available from 30 September 1994, although from 1 October 1988 the current rate of advance will be increased from £3,500 to £5,000. The Royal Navy long service advance of pay scheme will continue but the rate of advance will remain at £3,500.

A contract scheme for removals, already in existence within the Army, will be introduced within the United Kingdom for all three services from 16 May 1988. Single personnel aged 30 or over will benefit from the scheme. Baggage scales for moves on posting overseas and within the United Kingdom will also be improved across the board. For example, for moves overseas, a married major will get a 41 per cent. increase; a married corporal and a single lance-corporal a 52 per cent. increase.

Major changes will be made in home to duty travel reimbursement. Married quarter occupants will be exempt from a personal contribution, although claims for journeys of three miles or less will remain inadmissible. For those in private accommodation the allowance will be phased out by 1 April 1991; meanwhile, the personal contribution will be increased from three to seven miles to reflect the average distance to work now travelled by civilians. Personnel posted to a new unit less than 50 miles from their home, and who are therefore ineligible for the relocation package, may be paid the cost of excess fares. The amount of excess fares will be based upon the difference in distance travelled between home and the new and old duty units respectively, less a personal contribution of seven miles per day. Single personnel aged 30 or over will be eligible for the first time for assistance under these new arrangements.

Single personnel living-out at their duty station and who are subsequently sent on detached duty will have the period for which the accommodation charge is waived increased from 21 days to 12 months.

Royal Navy and Royal Marines personnel will, in accordance with the RN's accommodation policy, be required to opt for family stability or family mobility. This choice, coupled with the nature of the actual draft—sea or shore—will define which allowances personnel will receive. A service man will be able to change his decision only on the issue of a new appointment or draft. For naval personnel already married, the decision will need to be made on the occasion of the next appointment or draft on or after 1 October 1988, or by 1 April 1989, whichever is the earlier.

As announced in the 1988 pay review, the Government have accepted the AFPRB recommendations that seagoers should receive longer service at sea bonus and that separation allowance for seagoers and hard lying money for surface ships should be abolished. Seagoing personnel will receive extra warrants whilst at sea, and warrant credits to use in their next shore appointment or draft.

Army and RAF married personnel who opt to serve voluntarily unaccompanied on their next posting after 1 October 1988 will be required to pay for their accommodation in addition to the abated food charges. They will also lose their entitlement to separation allowance and separation warrants. Personnel on courses or attachments or postings of less than 12 months will be unaffected by these new regulations.

New arrangements will replace the current United Kingdom leave travel entitlements to basic and separation warrants. There will be a general entitlement to two warrants. Single personnel aged below 25 years of age will retain four warrants per year, as will personnel serving in Northern Ireland. In the Royal Navy, retention of warrants will depend upon rank rather than age. Army/RAF involuntarily separated personnel and Royal Navy personnel who opt for family stability rather than family mobility will be entitled to a total of 12. Each child at boarding school will be entitled to three journeys per year for school children's visits (SCVs) in the United Kingdom. There will be a parental contribution for the first 50 miles of all SCVs. Divorced or separated parents will be entitled to a total of eight warrants to enable them to visit their children. There will be additional shopping warrants for personnel in the Scottish outer isles. First class leave travel for senior officers will be abolished, and destinations will be restricted to nominated destinations in line with the intention that leave travel should be used only to preserve family ties.

Boarding school allowances. Separate allowances will be introduced for preparatory and senior schools to reflect the differing levels of fees paid. The higher rates for third and subsequent children will be abolished. The new arrangements provide for a minimum personal contribution of 10 per cent. of the fees in respect of any child. Parents of children already receiving boarding school allowance or entering boarding school during the remainder of 1988 will continue to receive the current allowance, appropriately uprated, if the amount is higher than their new entitlement, until that overtakes the current allowance, or until the end of the current stage of education.

There will be a number of other changes including the widening of the criteria for payment of plain clothes grant and allowance to include more personnel who are required to wear plain clothes in the course of their duties with some increases in rates. A new telephone call system will be introduced for personnel serving in Northern Ireland, as will a new allowance to compensate for the excess cost of coal to heat married quarters there.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Energy Use

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Mellor: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has set a target of 5 per cent. for reductions in energy usage in 1988-89; electricity for lighting and power is not metered separately and it is not therefore possible to set and monitor separate targets for lighting usage.

Most light fittings in Foreign and Commonwealth Office buildings (other than those which we expect to vacate in the near future) have been replaced in the last three to four years by energy efficient lighting equipment recommended by the Lighting Industry Federation and the PSA. We have no separate investment plans for lighting for 1988-89, but energy efficient lighting is being installed during the current refurbishment of the old public offices.

EC Directives

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement explaining the procedures under which directives are classified as stemming from particular clauses of the treaty of Rome, as amended by the Single European Act; and what means are available to member states if they consider that directives are being wrongly classified.

Mrs. Chalker: The great majority of legislation adopted by the Council requires a proposal from the Commission. It is for the Commission to propose the treaty article on which such measures are to be based. The Commission may amend its proposals during the course of discussion in the light of member states' views. The Council may amend any aspect of a Commission proposal, including the legal base, by unanimity. If a member state considers that the legal base of a measure once adopted is incorrect it may seek annulment of the measure by instituting proceedings in the European Court of Justice under article 173 of the EEC treaty.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the directives which have been made by the various Councils of Ministers under article 100A; and on how many such directives Her Majesty's Government have objected to the use of this clause.

Mrs. Chalker: The following directives have been adopted under article 100A of the treaty. The Government accept the legal base of these directives:

arrangements for summer time
vehicle emissions (two directives) lawn-mower noise (two directives) information on technical norms liquid fertilisers
toy safety

Rain Forests

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had, and plans to have, with the Malaysian Government regarding tropical rain forest management and the effects of forestry on the native tribal people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no direct discussions with the Malaysian Government on this matter. However both the federal Government and the relevant state governments are aware of concerns expressed about the environmental and social effects of commercial logging. I understand that the state Government of Sarawak has worked with the Malaysian branch of the World Wildlife Fund to prepare a conservation strategy for the state to help protect the forests and their inhabitants; and that enabling legislation has been passed so that it can be put into effect.

The Malaysian branch of the World Wildlife Fund is moreover continuing to work with the state government in an advisory capacity on conservation in the environment. The British high commission in Kuala Lumpur has reported that both sides regard their co-operation as very useful. The federal Government, for their part, have recently sent a delegation to Europe, led by the Minister for Primary Industries, Dr. Lim Keng Yaik, to explain the management of Malaysian rain forests.

Both we and the Malaysians are members of the International Tropical Timber Organisation, whose objectives balance conservation with trade expansion and diversification.

Angola

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will make a statement on the communiqué issued by representatives of the United States, South African, Angolan and Cuban Governments following their recently concluded meeting in London about the situation in Angola;

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of the non-involvement of UNITA in the recently concluded meeting in London about the situation in Angola; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what representations he made to the United States, South African, Angolan and Cuban Governments before or during the recently concluded meeting in London about the situation in Angola;

(4) what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of the South African Government's reaction to the recently concluded meeting in London about the situation in Angola;

(5) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy on proposals to link the search for a solution in Angola with an internal settlement in Namibia;

(6) what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of the non-involvement of SWAPO in the recently concluded meeting in London about the situation in Angola; and if he will make a statement;

(7) what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the revival at the recent London meeting of the 1978 United Nations' plan for a solution in Angola; and if he will make a statement;

(8) what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of the differing timetables for Cuban withdrawal from Angola envisaged by the South African and Cuban Governments;

(9) what representations he proposes to make to the Governments of the United States, South Africa, Cuba and Angola before their next meeting about the situation in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We were not directly involved in the talks held in London on 3-4 May, and it is not for us to comment on the details of them. However, we are encouraged by the progress made and the agreement by all parties on a further meeting in Africa. My right hon. and learned Friend, my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary and senior officials held bilateral meetings with members of all delegations. We support the US-led process designed to secure the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola and the implementation of the UN plan for Namibian independence. Withdrawal of all foreign troops from Angola, together with implementation of UN Security Council resolution 435, would contribute substantially to the stability of the region. We encourage all those involved in the search for peace to continue their efforts.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made, or proposes to make, to the Soviet Union following the recently concluded meeting in London about the situation in Angola.

Mrs. Chalker: We would expect the subject to arise in our regular contacts with the Soviet Union.

PRIME MINISTER

Michael Tighe

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what steps she has taken to satisfy herself of the existence and validity of the legal authority under which a bug was placed in the hay shed where Michael Tighe was killed; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is not the practice to comment on security matters.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Overseas Development (GDP)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to what proportion of gross domestic product each of the member countries of the European Community devotes to overseas development; and what is the average for the European Community Countries as a whole.

Mr. Chris Patten: Precise figures are only available for the eight European Community countries which belong to the OECD development assistance committee (DAC) and in respect to gross national product (GNP). According to the DAC chairman's 1987 report "Development Cooperation" the figures for 1986 are as follows:

Net official development assistance (oda)

	As percentage of GNP
Belgium	0·49
Denmark	0·89
France	0·72
Germany	0·43
Ireland	0·28
Italy	0·40
Netherlands	1·01
United Kingdom	0·32

The net official development assistance of these eight countries represents 0·51 per cent. of their combined GNP.

Southern Africa (Aid)

Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the levels of United Kingdom aid to (a) Mozambique and (b) Angola in the last year.

Mr. Chris Patten: Figures for 1987 are still provisional, but gross British bilateral aid to Mozambique was about £23 million and to Angola about £250,000.

Ethiopia

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any current plans to visit Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have no current plans to make a further visit to Ehiopia. I had hoped to do so last month, but the Ethiopian Government told me that this would not be convenient at present. They expressed the hope, which I share, that I would be able to visit at a mutually convenient time in the future.

Mozambique

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of Britain's aid allocation to Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: Our aid programme is welcomed and highly regarded by the Government of Mozambique. Aid from Britain and other donors in support of the Government's economic reform programme has been a factor in Mozambique's estimated 4 per cent. growth in GDP in 1987 and in helping Mozambique to limit the worst effects of the emergency.

Rain Forests

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give figures for (a) the amount of aid and (b) the percentage of total aid given by (i) the United Kingdom and (ii) the European Community to developing nations which was designated for tropical rain forest management programmes for each year for which figures are available since 1980; and if he will give projected figures for the same items for each of the next five years.

Mr. Chris Patten: The Overseas Development Administration's statistics do not show separate figures for aid expenditure on tropical rain forest management; nor are such figures available to us for European Community aid.

British bilateral aid expenditure on all types of forestry since 1980 was as follows:

As percentage of net bilateral aid programme

	£ thousands	Percent
1980	3,328	0·63
1981	3,792	0·58
1982	4,845	0·91
1983	4,491	0·80
1984	6,224	1·10
1986	14,921	2·20

Examples of current British aid commitments to projects concerned with rain forest management include the Korup national park (Cameroon), Maraca island (Brazil), forest reserve management (Sierra Leone), forest reserve inventory (Ghana) and tropical hardwood plantations and maintenance (Ivory Coast).

Under the fifth European development fund, which started commitments in 1981, about £9 million had been committed by September 1987 for forestry projects. Under the sixth European development fund, on which commitments started in 1986, about £27 million has been committed to forestry projects to date.

Likely expenditure in future years cannot be forecast, but I am ready to consider sympathetically sound new proposals.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Summer Time

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) when Her Majesty's Government's representative at the European Council agreed to the directive providing for a common European Economic Community summer time to be introduced after 1990; whether any objections were lodged to its being classified under article 100A which provides for majority vote; and if he will make a statement;

(2) pursuant to the speech by the Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Grantham (Mr. Hogg), on 28 April, Official Report, column 617, whether he has given further consideration to the appropriate classification of the summer time directive as being based on article 100A; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No directive has been prepared as yet to cover any period after 1989. When the Commission proposes the next draft directive, we shall consider most carefully the treaty base proposed in the context of the directive's content.

Prisoners (Escorts)

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any proposals for the introduction of a contracted-out system for the escort of prisoners to and from courts and whilst at courts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In his statement to the House on 30 March, my right hon. Friend announced his intention to publish a Green Paper on private sector involvement in all aspects of the remand system. This includes court escorts and manning.

Marches Banning Order (Leeds)

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of West Yorkshire on the implementation of the order banning marches in Leeds on 23 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Decisions on how to enforce a prohibition under the Public Order Act 1986 are operational matters for the chief officer of police. I understand from the chief constable of West Yorkshire that a number of assemblies, unaffected by the prohibition on processions, took place and that these were well ordered. The West Yorkshire police are investigating complaints that, as one of these assemblies dispersed, those leaving it formed into a procession.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the extension of his Department's approval to the Drunmore shooting centre on 15 February for small and full bore rifles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply to his earlier question on 31 March, at column 687.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department why his Department authorised the extension of approval for the Drunmore shooting centre on 15 February to cover small and full bore rifles.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Approval was extended on the request of the club in question, against the criteria set out in the reply which I gave to a question from my right hon. Friend the Member for Woking (Mr. Onslow) on 15 January at column 446.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which chief officer of police and of which force has been appointed to assist Mrs. Vickers of the Police Complaints Authority to investigate complaints about operational matters and the administration of the Firearms Act 1968 in relation to the firearms certificate granted and varied to the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The investigating officer is Mr. G. E. Hedges, assistant chief constable of the Thames Valley police.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the rights and entitlements which accrue to a firearms club which is approved by his Department under the terms of the Firearms Act 1968 as against a firearms club which is not approved for the use of small bore and full bore rifles and pistols and revolvers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Approved clubs are eligible to apply for a club firearm certificate at no cost. This enables members who do not hold their own firearm certificate to use firearms and ammunition belonging to the club when they are engaged as members in drill or target practice. Members of those clubs which are not approved must hold a personal firearm certificate which specifies the firearms and ammunition they are entitled to possess.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received, giving dates from (a) the chief constable of Thames Valley police and (b) the Thames Valley police authority, as a result of the inquest into deaths caused by the late Michael Ryan on 19 August 1987, seeking amendments to the Firearms Act 1968.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. The chief constable's observations on firearms legislation were included in his report to my right hon. Friend on the shootings.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to what disciplinary action giving dates he (a) has taken or (b) proposes to take against police officers involved in (i) operational firearms matters and (ii) administration of the Firearms Act 1968 in relation to the grant of or variation to the firearms certificate of the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No decisions on disciplinary action can be taken until the investigation being carried out under the supervision of the Police Complaints Authority has been completed.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for registration for British citizenship were received by his Department in envelopes date stamped after 31 December 1987; how many such applicants have been told that their applications have been refused and their fee refunded; how many such applicants have been told that their applications have been accepted; and how many such applicants are still to be informed whether their application has been accepted or rejected.

Mr. Renton: Information is not available in the form requested. Approximately 13,500 applications for naturalisation or registration were received in the period 1 January to 30 April 1988. Applications are generally processed in order of receipt and very few post-December applications will have been decided yet.

Security Personnel

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether security personnel from Arab countries are granted similar rights of access and operation into and within the United Kingdom as those from Israel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: It has been the practice of successive Governments not to comment on security matters.

SCOTLAND

Rating Reform

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of fully completed community charge registration forms returned in each region in Scotland, the percentage in each area that remain unreturned and the percentage in each area returned which seek a decision by the registration officer.

Mr. Lang: Information in this form is not available centrally. The detailed arrangements for making up the community charges register are for individual registration officers. My right hon. and learned Friend has every reason to believe that the registration process is going smoothly.

Agriculture and Food Regulations

Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy not to introduce regulations in relation to agriculture and food in advance of the European Community regulations on the same subjects.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Our general policy is to avoid imposing regulations on our farmers which will place them at a disadvantage with their counterparts elsewhere in the Community but there are occasions, and the bans on the veal crate system and tooth grinding in sheep are recent examples, where practices are so unacceptable as to require us to take the lead.

Mouth Bridge Inquiry

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the reporter's decision on the Mouth Bridge local inquiry.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The report of the inquiry is expected to be submitted in the near future. When it is, my right hon. and learned Friend will consider it carefully and make a decision as soon as possible thereafter.

Nursery Education

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether any assistance is given through rate support grant for the provision of nursery education.

Mr. Lang: Rate support grant is used in support of authorities' income generally. It is not attributed to particular services.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

School Orchestras

37. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he takes to encourage the formation of school orchestras.

Mrs. Rumbold: It is for each school to decide, in the light of its individual circumstances, whether it should form a school orchestra. However, the Government acknowledge the desirability of participation in group music making for pupils of all ages and hope schools will provide opportunities for this where possible.

Her Majesty's Inspectors

Mr. Forth: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the number of schools inspected by Her Majesty's inspectors, in each year since 1983, (b) the number of these schools formally inspected and having reports issued upon them and (c) the number of Her Majesty's inspectors currently in post.

Mr. Dunn: In the academic year 1983-84 Her Majesty's inspectors visited some 3,600 primary and 3,400 secondary schools. The corresponding figures for 1984-85 are some 3,000 primary and 2,200 secondary schools, and for 1985-86 some 3,000 primary and 2,100 secondary schools. Formal inspections led to published reports as follows:

	Number
1984	197
1985	158
1987	246

There are currently 474 HMI in post.

Engineers and Scientists

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the numbers of engineers and scientists employed by the Science and Engineering Research Council, the Cavendish laboratory, the Rutherford-Appleton laboratories and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for the period 1970 to 1988.

Mr. Jackson: Information on the Cavendish laboratory, which is a component part of the University of Cambridge, is not held centrally and the Government's relationship with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy. The information requested on the Science and Engineering Research Council (SERC) and its Rutherford Appleton laboratory (RAL) is as follows:

Year	Engineers	Scientists	Engineers	Scientists
1970	902	397	287·5	347

[1] Figures for SERC as a whole as at 31 March each year.
[2] Figures for RAL as at 31 December each year.
[3] Increase in numbers of scientists due to the merger of the Atlas Computing Laboratory.
[4] Increase in numbers of scientists and engineers due to the transfer of Appleton Laboratory staff from Slough to Chilton.

Public Bodies (Costs)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the gross and net cost to public funds of the Science and Engineering Research Council, the Cavendish laboratory and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority for the financial years 1979-80 to 1987-88.

Mr. Jackson: The following table shows the gross expenditure and the net cost to public funds of the Science and Engineering Research Council from 1979-80 to 1987-88:

£ million

	Gross exp.	Net cost to public funds
1979-80	181	177
1980-81	208	203
1981-82	225	219
1982-83	244	237
1983-84	264	259
1984-85	290	286
1985-86	317	309
1986-87	337	326
1987-88	386	375

Financial information on the Cavendish laboratory is not held centrally.

Responsibility for the Government's relationship with the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority rests with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Research and Development

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the 10 largest publicly funded research and development organisations for which he is responsible, by turnover and staffing.

Mr. Jackson: Grant-in-aid funding is provided through the Department for the following organisations engaged in research and development, including research in the humanities:

Science and Engineering Research Council
Medical Research Council
Natural Environment Research Council
Agricultural and Food Research Council
Economic and Social Research Council
The Royal Society
The British Academy
The Fellowship of Engineering

The Department also funds research in universities through the block grants paid on the advice of the University Grants Committee. Information on research expenditure by university is not available.

Some research is funded through the grants-in-aid paid to the Cranfield institute of technology and the Open University.

Burnage High School, Manchester

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will obtain a copy of the report of the MacDonald inquiry into Burnage high school, Manchester, with a view to seeking an order from the House for the printing and publication thereof.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The report was commissioned by the Manchester city council. I understand that it will be considered by the council's education committee on 17 May. I have asked for a copy of the report to be sent to me when it is published. When this is to hand I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

WALES

Nursery Schooling (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much cash he has allocated to Clwyd local education authority for nursery schooling in each of the years since April 1979 in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Nursery schooling, like other aspects of local education authority spending, is funded from locally raised revenue supported by mainly unhypothecated Government grants, not from cash allocations by central Government.

Opencast Mine, Ewloe

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects to announce the result of the public inquiry into the Opencast Executive's application to mine at Cheapside, Ewlow, Deeside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Before the end of July.

Datamagnetics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how much money the Welsh Development Agency has put into Datamagnetics; and in what financial categories and in which years;

(2) how much money Her Majesty's Government has put into Datamagnetics; and in what categories and in which years;

(3) how many jobs are in existence at Datamagnetics; what efforts he and his agencies are making to assist the company to stay in business as a sizeable employer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: The grants made and resources invested in Datamagnetics by the Government and the Welsh Development Agency are as follows:

£ thousands

Regional development grant	71	400	212
Regional selective assistance	—	732	—
Support for innovation	—	100	66
WDA equity	500	—	222
WDA factory improvements	702	—	—
WDA rent concessions	138	138	—

At present, employment at the company stands at 165.

Prime responsibility for attempting to secure the company's future rests with the receiver who has said he is optimistic that it can be sold as a going concern. The Welsh Office and the WDA will also continue to assist in whatever way they can. The agency has already drawn the opportunity presented by the business to the attention of a wide range of interests, including ones in the far east and the United States of America.

Even if the company cannot be sold as a going concern the factory's excellent location and facilities provide a valuable base to attract another user and create alternative job opportunities.

CIVIL SERVICE

Women (Senior Posts)

65. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what progress has been made in ensuring that women are represented at senior levels in the Civil Service.

Mr. Luce: We are committed to equality of opportunity for women in the Civil Service and good progress has been made. I recently placed a copy of the report "Equal Opportunities for Woman in the Civil Service" in the Library: this sets out the progress made and priorities for further action.

Ethnic Minorities

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will publish a table showing for each Department of the Civil Service and each grade within each Department the number of (a) members of ethnic minorities and (b) women in post, giving the total numbers of staff in each Department employed in each grade; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 7 March 1988]: I have today written to the hon. Member. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Libraries of Parliament.

ENVIRONMENT

Inner London Education Authority

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, further to his statement on 9 March, Official Report, column 325, if he will now use his powers under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act to direct the Inner London education authority to dispose of its land holdings.

Mr. Waldegrave: The following sites belonging to the ILEA are on the register of publicly owned vacant or underused land over one acre in size set up under the 1980 Act.

Borough and Site	Size (acres)
Bexley—Camdale road playing field	2·13
Lewisham—Plassey road	1·89
Tower Hamlets—Pritchards road	1·31
Tower Hamlets—Bonner street	1·05

My right hon. Friend issued a notice on 3 March 1988 of his intention to direct ILEA to dispose of the Plassey road site. The authority have been asked to inform my Department what action is being taken to bring the other three sites back into positive use.

Football Matches (Attendances)

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the level of attendances at football matches on Sundays for the last four years.

Mr. Moynihan: Neither the Football League nor the Football Association holds separate information about the level of attendances at football matches played on Sundays.

Rating Reform

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the level of community charge which will apply in the Houghton and Washington constituency (a) with safety nets, and (b) assuming 10 per cent. non-payment.

Mr. Howard: The level of community charge which will apply when the new system is introduced will depend in large part on the spending decisions of individual local authorities. On the basis of 1987-88 expenditure figures, I estimate the safety netted community charge for Sunderland at £200. Any shortfall in collection would have to be recovered locally and would increase community charges proportionately for those who pay.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what would be the actual total contribution made from community charge payments and through central taxation by residents in the South Cambridgeshire district with the following circumstances: (a) a married couple with two young children and the husband only working with income of £7,500 per annum gross, (b) a married couple with two young children with a £30,000 mortgage where both are working with an income of £12,000 per annum gross, (c) as (b) with an income of £20,000 per annum gross and (d) as (b) with an income of £30,000 per annum gross.

Mr. Howard: The information required to make the estimates asked for is not available. Clearly the couple specified in case (d) will pay substantially more in income and direct taxes than the couple in case (a). Since half of local spending is met from national taxation, the former couple's total contribution—direct and indirect—to the cost of local services will be greater than in the case of the other family. Overall we estimate that the top 10 per cent. of households by income pay around 15 times as much as the lowest paid 10 per cent. of households towards the costs of local services.

Conservation

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards the preservation of the architectural heritage, listed buildings and conservation areas.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend's policy is set out in detail in DoE circular 8/87, a copy of which is in the Library. In essence, it remains our resolve to preserve the architectural heritage, to which listed buildings and conservation areas make such an important contribution.

Council Housing (London Docklands Development Corporation)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to introduce legislation to give London Docklands development corporation powers to refurbish council housing.

Mr. Trippier: No legislation is required. The LDDC has already carried out external refurbishment or environmental works on over 25 council estates and the corporation is considering what further contributions it might make.

Cambridgeshire Structure Plan

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the inspector's report on the Cambridgeshire structure plan.

Mr. Waldegrave: The panel that conducted the examination in public into the Cambridgeshire structure plan review has just submitted its report to the Secretary of State. It will be published when the Secretary of State has considered it and decided upon his proposed modifications.

Nuclear Waste Dumping

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has had any representations from Nirex or other private companies regarding nuclear waste dumping in the areas of (i) the Fens of north Cambridgeshire and south Lincolnshire or (ii) the Wash; and if he has instigated in his Department any inquiries as to the feasibility of such dumping in the said areas.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has received no representations from Nirex or other private companies regarding the disposal of radioactive waste in the Fens or the Wash. Investigations into the feasibility of using any part of the country for a disposal facility are a matter for Nirex.

Genetically Engineered Organisms (EC Regulations)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his response to the EEC regulations for handling genetically engineered organisms in relation to laboratory tests on genetically modified micro-organisms and the release outdoors of modified organisms.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand that the European Commission will shortly be presenting to the Council of Ministers three proposed EC directives relating to work with genetically engineered organisms. Officials of relevant Government Departments have been involved in preliminary discussions on these proposals. Explanatory memoranda will be presented to Parliament to inform the House in the normal way once the directives are presented. The United Kingdom Government will thereafter be fully involved in discussions on the proposals.

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the expenditure of his Department on (a) local environmental services, (b) water-related services and (c) total environmental services, excluding housing, for each year since 1974 for which figures are available.

Mr. Ridley: The figures are shown in the table. They cover only voted expenditure by my Department on environmental and water-related services which is currently shown on class X, Votes 1 and 2, of the Supply Estimates.

The figures include grants towards local authorities' expenditure, grants-in-aid to statutory environmental bodies, payments made under the former Community Land Act and subscriptions to international environmental organisations.

The figures exclude expenditure by local authorities and described in the PEWP, table 10.1, as "local environmental services". They also exclude grants for the urban programme and derelict land clearance, expenditure on the built heritage and the costs of privatisation of the water industry which are borne on Votes 3, 4 and 9 respectively.

The figures are derived from the Appropriation accounts for classes VIII and X for the years 1974-75 to 1986-87.

Year	Local environmental services £ million	Water related services £ million	Total environmental services £ million
1974-75	5·6	7·2	37·6
1975-76	9·6	11·0	44·1
1976-77	3·0	14·6	36·2
1977-78	11·9	28·5	44·7
1978-79	15·8	34·4	62·8
1979-80	29·7	34·9	76·3
1980-81	32·5	40·0	81·7
1981-82	21·2	46·1	69·2
1982-83	32·7	53·6	101·2
1983-84	20·3	57·9	96·5
1984-85	23·0	55·9	109·4
1985-86	14·4	55·3	118·3
1986-87	14·1	62·6	139·2

Departmental Expenditure

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the expenditure by his Department on (a) radioactive waste management, (b) air pollution research and (c) total expenditure on environmental protection and research, for each year since 1974 for which figures are available.

Mr. Ridley: Expenditure on environmental protection research by the Department of the Environment was as follows:

Year	(a) Radioactive waste management £000	(b) Air pollution £000	(c) Total environmental protection[1] £000
1974-75	—	861	[2]1,821
1975-76	—	1,377	[2]2,943
1976-77	—	1,164	[2]2,671
1977-78	—	1,248	[2]3,655
1978-79	3,914	1,578	7,958
1979-80	5,113	1,584	8,810
1980-81	9,780	1,841	13,619
1981-82	8,833	2,158	13,681
1982-83	8,116	1,714	12,517
1983-84	8,805	1,866	12,974
1984-85	9,360	1,874	13,869
1985-86	11,725	3,704	17,978
1986-87 (provisional)	10,900	4,500	18,000

[1] Includes radioactive waste management and air pollution research; excludes water and countryside research.
[2] Figures before 1978-79 do not include any expenditure on research on radioactive waste management since it was not until then a DOE responsibility.

Private Landlords

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking legislation to require private landlords to disclose their identity and actual address to tenants; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My Department has received complaints from time to time from tenants who did not know the name and address of their landlord. Under the Landlord and Tenant Act 1985 a landlord must supply this information if a tenant requests it either from the person to whom rent is paid or from the landlord's agent. Failure to do so is a criminal offence. Following the recommendations of the Nugee committee on the management of privately owned blocks of flats, this provision was augmented in the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 which, like the 1985 Act, extends to England and Wales. The 1987 Act provides that a landlord must state his name and address on any rent or service change demand and that service charges need not be paid until he has done so. The landlord must also give a name and address in England and Wales for the service or notices, and the tenants may withhold any rent or service charge until he has done so.

Housing Corporation

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what extra resources he intends to provide in 1988-89 for the Housing Corporation to fund major repairs to housing association dwellings, which have now become empty and uninhabitable because the local authority is now unable to finance necessary major repairs; and how he intends these resources to be allocated.

Mrs. Roe: The Housing Corporation's approved development programme for 1988-89 represents an increase over earlier plans of some £50 million, to £737 million. Within this, the corporation expects to approve £45 million of new schemes for the major repair of housing association dwellings. They have been asked to concentrate these resources on bringing empty properties back into use in areas of shortage. In the past, where the property was originally developed with local authority money, the corporation provided funding for repairs only in exceptional cases. But they have now been authorised to fund repairs wherever the local authority is genuinely unable to do so itself on condition that the dwellings are then let to homeless people.

Water Supplies (North West Water Authority)

Mr. Terry Fields: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list, by quantity per gallon or litre, chemicals and other matter added to domestic water supplies by the North West water authority; what is the purpose of each additive listed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Like all water undertakers, North West water authority adds small quantities of several chemicals to water supplies. These vary according to the quality of the water being treated. I have asked the authority to reply to the hon. Member in more detail.

Environmental Assessment (EC Directive)

Mr. Wyn Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will take steps to reverse the provision of the European Community directive on environmental assessment 84/337/EEC which excludes from mandatory environmental assessment major projects such as port expansion, docks and estuarial barrages effected through private Bills.

Mr. Waldegrave: Article 1.5 of the directive provides:

"This Directive shall not apply to projects the details of which are adopted by a specific act of national legislation, since the objectives of this Directive, including that of supplying information, are achieved through the legislative process".

Private Bill procedures are matters for Parliament and are at present under consideration by the Joint Committee on Private Bill Procedure.

Housing Investment Programme (Coventry)

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the housing investment programme allocation made in each year since 1974 to the city of Coventry, expressed in constant 1988 prices.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 21 April, at column 563. The present system of HIP allocations began in 1978-79. The table referred to in the answer has now been placed in the Library.

Heysham Harbour (Port Manager)

Mr. Heffer: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will prosecute under the Merchant Shipping Acts the port manager of Heysham harbour for cutting the rope of the Tynwald with a chain saw on Saturday 30 April.

Mr. Nicholls: I have been asked to reply.

No. The Merchant Shipping Act did not apply to the incident referred. On the information available neither the ship, its crew nor any person ashore were endangered by the action of the harbour master and there was no contravention of any legal requirement.

ENERGY

Electricity (Privatisation)

7. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, what recent meetings he has had with the chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board to discuss the privatisation of electricity.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of the CEGB, Lord Marshall, regularly to discuss various matters relating to the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

23. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what interest has been shown by investors, both institutional and private, United Kingdom based and overseas, in investing in the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: I am pleased to say that considerable interest is already being expressed in the privatisation of the electricity supply industry, and I am confident that the flotations will be a success.

Mr. Prescott: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what discussions he has had with his financial advisers about the implications of recent stock exchange difficulties for privatisation of the Central Electricity Generating Board and the timetable for such privatisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have discussions with my advisers on a wide range of subjects connected with the privatisation of the electricity supply industry. The privatisation will have to take account, amongst other factors, of the condition of the market at the time of the sale, not of last autumn, and I am confident that there will be wide interest among institutional investors and members of the public.

27. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received on his proposals for protecting customer rights and standards of service when the electricity supply industry is privatised.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received representations from a range of interested parties welcoming the Government's proposals to give new rights to the consumer.

28. Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from interested parties in connection with the request that the electricity supply industry will be required to provide about one-fifth of the electricity from non-fossil sources following privatisation.

Mr. Parkinson: I have received a number of representations from a range of interested parties.

29. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his estimate of the likely increase in electricity prices in the period leading up to privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Mr. Parkinson: Electricity prices are set by the industry in the light of the Government's financial target and the scope they have to make cost reductions. It is too early to say what the price rise will be next year and beyond.

34. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received concerning the regulation of the proposed private electricity supply companies

Mr. Parkinson: I have received representations on a wide range of subjects connected with the privatisation of the electricity supply industry.

Electricity Generation

10. Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from the private sector regarding new opportunities in electricity generation.

Mr. Parkinson: Independent generators have welcomed the Government's proposals for electricity privatisation as set out in the White Paper and the new opportunities in electricity generation that this will bring.

British Coal

18. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has been informed by the chairman of British Coal of the future reorganisation of its administration.

Mr. Parkinson: Yes.

Oil Supplies

20. Mr. Stokes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy when he expects the current world surplus production of oil to end.

Mr. Peter Morrison: World oil production capacity currently exceeds demand by around 10 millions barrels per day. Most of the additional oil capacity is in OPEC. Known world reserves of oil and gas are still rising and the future is therefore unpredictable.

Hinkley C Nuclear Power Station

22. Mr. Ted Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what estimates he has made of the cost of electricity from the proposed Hinkley C nuclear power station.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board.

Coal Industry

24. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much has been invested in the coal industry since April 1979.

35. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much has been invested in the coal industry since April 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer my hon. Friends to the answer given today to my hon. Friend the Member for Derby, North (Mr. Knight).

25. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will give the most recent figures for productivity in the coal industry.

Mr. Michael Spicer: For the week ended 23 April, deep mined output per man shift was 4·18 tonnes, a new record.

30. Mr. Douglas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will meet the chairman of British Coal to discuss reorganisation proposals in the light of manpower reductions in the Scottish coalfields.

Mr. Parkinson: I meet the chairman of British coal regularly to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

United Kingdom Continental Shelf

31. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are the current levels of drilling activity on the United Kingdom continental shelf; and what was the comparable figure a year ago.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Ninety-four wells were started in the first quarter of 1988 and 47 wells were started in the same period of 1987. The number of wells drilled in the first quarter was one of the highest figures recorded and reflects the growing level of confidence amongst companies involved in the North sea.

Coal Imports

32. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has discussed with the chairman of British Coal the level of expected imported coal.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My right hon. Friend and I have regular meetings with the chairman of British Coal to discuss all aspects of the coal industry.

Domestic Gas Disconnections

33. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what action his Department is taking to seek to ensure that British Gas implements the recommendations of the Gas Consumers Council document, "An Analysis of Gas Disconnections."

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Gas Consumers Council and the Director General of Gas Supply have both made representations to British Gas plc on the operation of the code of practice on disconnections. I understand that these are being considered by British Gas, as required by condition 12 of its authorisation.

Aerosols

36. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if there are any plans to ban the use of aerosols from his Department's buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Parkinson: No, there are no such plans in my Department.

Coal Mining (Subsidence)

Mr. Woodcock: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether his Department holds a copy of the British Coal subsidence manual.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No.

Nuclear Waste Dumping

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he has been consulted by the Central Electricity Generating Board, or Nirex, or any other organisation regarding the feasibility of nuclear waste dumping in (a) the Fens area of north Cambridgeshire and south Lincolnshire or (b) the Wash.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. As the discussion document "The Way Forward" explains, Nirex has identified a number of areas which might be suitable for a deep repository for low and intermediate level radioactive waste including the Fens area and the Wash. No decisions have yet been taken but Nirex hopes to make recommendations to Government by the end of the year.

Wave Power

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what research and development projects into wave power are currently being funded by his Department.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department is currently funding:

—The construction and monitoring of an experimental, shoreline, oscillating water-column device by Belfast university on the island of Islay;

—A feasibility study of a modular offshore device by Lancaster university;

—Assessments of shoreline and modular offshore devices by the energy technology support unit.

Reports on these studies will be published in due course.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what recent assessment his Department has made of the contribution of wave power to electricity generation in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The last overall assessment of the contribution of wave power to electricity generation was published as ETSU report R30 "Prospects for the Exploitation of the Renewable Energy Technologies of the United Kingdom" and this information was updated in Energy Paper No. 54 "Energy Technologies for the United Kingdom: 1986 Appraisal of R, D & D". Copies of both reports are in the Library of the House. The energy technology support unit is currently conducting assessments of the potential for shoreline and modular offshore devices and a proposal is under consideration for a preliminary survey of possible sites for shoreline devices.

British Coal (Housing Stock)

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will take steps to require British Coal to oblige purchasers of its housing stock to disclose their identity and actual address to individual tenants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The statutes already provide that this information is made available to or is accessible to all tenants.

North Sea Oil (Companies' Orders)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will provide a breakdown for the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88, and an estimate for the year 1987-89 for (a) the number of orders for North sea oil-related work that have been placed by oil companies, (b) a breakdown of these orders by the type of work involved and the cost, (c) the proportion of the orders by volume and cash amount that has gone to United Kingdom-based companies and the proprotion that has gone to overseas companies and (d) the country of origin for the orders that have been placed overseas.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Orders greater than £100,000 are reported by offshore oil operators by calendar year.

The number of orders reported in 1986 and 1987 were 3,274 and 2,961. A breakdown of these orders into type of work, cost and overseas content is contained in the Department of Energy publication "Development of the Oil and Gas Resources of the United Kingdom", a copy of which is held in the House of Commons Library. The United Kingdom content of the value of orders placed in 1986 and 1987 was 82 per cent. of £2·23 billion and 87 per cent. of £1·87 billion. The proportion by volume of orders won by United Kingdom companies for these years is approximately 87 per cent. and 89 per cent. It is not possible to give the overseas element by individual country.

A rise in the value of orders placed is expected in 1988 and again United Kingdom industry will be well placed to secure a major share of the work available.

Petrol from Coal

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what support his Department is giving to research directed at obtaining petrol from coal and similar solid hydrocarbons.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department is contributing £3 million to British Coal's coal liquefaction pilot plant project at Point of Ayr colliery in north Wales. Support for British Coal's participation with Germany and Sweden in the International Energy Agency programme on pyrolysis of coal amounts to £0·7 million.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Scheduled Offences

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many suspects have been questioned at each of the Royal Ulster Constabulary holding centres in Northern Ireland in the last 12 months regarding scheduled offences under the emergency legislation.

Mr. Stanley: A total of 1,851 persons were arrested by the RUC and questioned about alleged terrorist-type offences during the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been charged with scheduled offences under the emergency legislation as a result of interviews held at each of the Royal Ulster Constabulary holding centres in Northern Ireland in the last 12 months.

Mr. Stanley: During the period 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988, a total of 458 persons were charged with terrorist-type offences.

Mr. Peter Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many suspects interrogated about alleged scheduled offences under the emergency legislation at each of the Royal Ulster Constabulary holding centres in the last 12 months have refused to answer any questions at all during interrogation.

Mr. Stanley: It is not the practice to provide such information.

Javelin Anti-aircraft Missiles (Chile)

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what advice was sought by Short Brothers from his Department in connection with the possible sale of Javelin anti-aircraft missiles to Chile.

Mr. Viggers: It is not the Government's practice to comment on individual export matters.

Teachers (Absence)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will take steps to provide a supply or substitute teacher from the first day on which a teacher is absent to infant classes (P1-P3) for all primary schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: The position will be considered in a review of substitute provisions presently being carried out by the Department of Education for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the actual cost of first day cover for absence of teachers in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years in (a) primary schools and (b) post primary schools;

(2) what was the cost of providing first day cover for absent teachers in schools with an average daily enrolment of less than 222 pupils in each of the last three years.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of first day cover for approved planned absence of teachers from schools in Northern Ireland in each of the last three years in (a) primary schools and (b) post-primary schools.

Dr. Mawhinney: This information is not available in the form requested.

Pupil-Teacher Ratio

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present pupil-teacher ratio for (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney: Available information relates to the 1986-87 school year and is as follows:

	Ratio
Primary[1]	23·4
Secondary[2]	14·9

[1] Includes nursery classes in primary schools and preparatory departments of grammar schools.
[2] Consists of secondary intermediate schools and secondary departments of grammar schools.

University of Ulster

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many four-year courses at the University of Ulster have been cut to three-year courses over the past five years.

Dr. Mawhinney: No such reductions have been made at the University of Ulster since it was formed in October 1984.

Elections (Non-violence Oath)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is yet in a position to say when he expects the legislation providing for a non-violence oath for local government elections in Northern Ireland to be introduced.

Mr. Tom King: The position remains as set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Belfast, South (Rev. Martin Smyth) on 28 March, at column 313.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Public Expenditure

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will bring forward proposals to enable Parliament to vote spending authority for all or parts of the half of public expenditure not currently so voted; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: Parliament has authorised a number of types of public expenditure to be defrayed in ways other than annual voting of Supply. For example, payments from the national insurance fund are met from contributions and voted money on the authority of the Social Security Act 1975 and subsequent Acts. The United Kingdom's gross contribution to the European Community is paid as a standing service on the Consolidated Fund under the provisions of section 2(3) of the European Communities Act 1972. For nationalised industries Parliament periodically sets borrowing limits. Local authorities raise that part of their expenditure which is not funded by voted grants either through rates or through their own borrowing.

VAT

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has for changing local authorities liability to value added tax with regard to the practice and proposals of the EEC.

Mr. Lilley: The Government consider that the United Kingdom fully meets its European Community obligations in so far as the VAT liabilities of local authorities are concerned, and is aware of no specific proposals by the European Commission for legislation likely to require major changes in this area. However, if my hon. Friend has a particular point in mind perhaps he could write to me.

Company Profitability

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the rise in company profitability in 1987.

Mr. Major: The profitability of non-North sea industrial and commercial companies is provisionally estimated to have risen by 1½ percentage points between 1986 and 1987, to 10½ per cent.—the highest level for about 20 years.

Personal Incomes

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of real personal disposable income in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of real personal disposable income in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: Real personal disposable income in 1987 is estimated to have been 15 per cent. higher than in 1979. Further growth is expected this year.

Balance of Payments

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the current balance of payments position.

Mr. Major: At Budget time my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast a current account deficit of £4 billion for 1988.

Energy Use

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy-efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Brooke: A 4 per cent. saving has been assumed in the preparation of the Department's overall energy budget. No specific target has been set for the reduction of lighting costs.

HMSO Publications

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many of Her Majesty's Stationery Office publications are currently in print.

Mr. Brooke: There are currently around 43,000 HMSO titles in print.

Coinage

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he plans to introduce the new 5p and 10p coins announced on 17 December 1987.

Mr. Lawson: The new 5p coin will be issued in June 1990, and the new 10p coin will be issued in June 1992.

Taxation Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for 1988-89 the total reduction in income tax, inheritance tax and capital gains tax liability following the Budget that will accrue to the top (a) 0·1 per cent., (b) 1 per cent., (c) 5 per cent. and (d) 10 per cent. of taxpayers and to the bottom (i) 70 per cent., (ii) 60 per cent., (iii) 50 per cent., (iv) 25 per cent., (v) 10 per cent. and (vi) 5 per cent. of taxpayers.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 April 1988]: I regret that information is not available to make reliable estimates in the detail requested for inheritance tax and capital gains tax. However, it is estimated that under the Budget proposals the reduction in capital gains tax on gains realised in 1988-89 by the top 5 per cent. of income tax payers will be rather less than £50 million.

Estimates of the direct revenue costs in a full year of the income tax changes above indexation are given in the table. Reliable estimates cannot be made for the top 0·1 per cent. of taxpayers since the estimates are based on projections of the 1985-86 survey of personal income.

Reductions in income tax liability compared with the indexed 1987-88 tax regime

Range of quantiles[1] of the income tax distribution	Reduction in tax £ million
Top:
1 per cent.	1,880
5 per cent.	2,690
10 per cent.	3,160
Bottom[2]:
70 per cent.	1,730
60 per cent.	1,310
50 per cent.	960
25 per cent.	330
10 per cent.	100
5 per cent.	40
All taxpayers	6,050

[2] Includes 240,000 single people and married couples taken out of tax by increases in allowances over indexation.

THE ARTS

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Minister for the Arts what estimate he has of the proportion of artefacts held in museums and galleries currently on public display.

Mr. Luce: The proportion of artefacts in museums and galleries on public display varies from institution to institution and with the nature of the collection. The National gallery and the Wallace collection, for example, have all of their collection on display. For museums with large reference collections, such as the British museum, the National History museum and the Victoria and Albert museum, only a proportion can be displayed at any one time.

The Government are keen to improve public access to the treasures in our museums and galleries by wider use of the reserve collections and by loans to other institutions.

All national museums and galleries arrange access by members of the public to items not on display and all aim to rotate items between the reserve collection and public display. A good deal of material is loaned out already under the terms of the Government indemnity scheme. I would like to see more and have asked the Museums and Galleries Commission to encourage this through its recently formed touring exhibition unit.

English National Museums

43. Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the directors of the English national museums to discuss the resource implications of the National Audit Office report on English national museums.

58. Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the directors of the English national museums to discuss the resource implications of the National Audit Office report on English national museums.

Mr. Luce: I am meeting the director of each national museum and gallery that I sponsor to discuss the institutions corporate plan for the next five years, including the resource implications of their plans and priorities.

47. Mr. Haynes: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the trades unions concerned to discuss the staffing implications of the National Audit Office report on English national museums.

61. Mr. Meale: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has met the relevant trades unions to discuss the staffing implications of the National Audit Office report on English national museums.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans to do so. It is for the individual museums and galleries to discuss their priorities and development with their staffs in the context of their corporate plans.

Victoria and Albert Museum

44. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will provide additional resources for the Victoria and Albert museum national art library.

59. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will provide additional resources so that the British museum, the Victoria and Albert museum and the Tate gallery can respond to the report of the National Audit Office on English national museums.

Mr. Luce: The allocations to the Victoria and Albert and other national museums and galleries are decided in the light of information provided by the institutions. It is for the Victoria and Albert trustees to indicate the needs of the national art library and the priority they attach to them.

Natural History Museum

45. Mr. Battle: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many people have paid for admission to the Natural History museum in the past 12 months.

48. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Minister for the Arts what have been the administrative costs of admission charges to the Natural History museum in 1987-88.

49. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the income from admission charges for the Natural History museum in the past 12 months.

52. Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many staff were employed on administering admission charges at the Natural History museum in 1987-88.

54. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Minister for the Arts what has been the income from admission charges at the Natural History museum in the past 12 months.

55. Ms. Walley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what were the costs of setting up admission charges at the Natural History museum in 1987-88.

56. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many staff were employed in administering admission charges at the Natural History museum in 1987-88.

57. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many people have paid for admission to the Natural History museum in the past 12 months.

Mr. Luce: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Members for Eccles (Miss Lestor) and Houghton and Washington (Mr. Boyes) earlier today.

Museums and Galleries

46. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many museum and gallery corporate plans have so far been prepared in the current year.

Mr. Luce: All the national museums and galleries that I sponsor have prepared or are preparing corporate plans for the period up to March 1993. So far this year I have received plans from six of the institutions. I am discussing their plans with all of them.

Touring Companies

50. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Minister for the Arts how he is encouraging touring companies involved in the performing arts in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: I announced a three-year programme of expenditre for the Arts Council last November, which included funds to strengthen touring in Great Britain. I understand that the council will allocate an additional £1·5 million for this purpose in 1988-89.

In addition, I warmly welcome the council's new touring initiative "Upstart". It represents a partnership between the public and private sectors which will enable productions to be taken first to the regions and then to London, bringing drama of the highest quality to the widest possible audience.

Imperial War Museum

51. Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Minister for the Arts what progress has been made in the redevelopment of the Imperial War museum.

Mr. Luce: On 30 March I performed the "topping out" ceremony to mark the formal completion of structural work on stage 1 of the redevelopment of the Imperial War museum's main building in Lambeth road. This £16·7 million building project, which is being financed by a partnership of arts programme funding, donations and the museum's earned income, will more than double public display space and will improve visitor facilities.

The museum has ambitious and innovative plans for fitting out the new galleries and for redisplaying its collections, for which it is seeking sponsorship to supplement its public funding. I wish it every success.

When the new galleries open in June 1989, we will have an exciting, modern museum, second to none in its field.

Business Sponsorship

53. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Minister for the Arts what is his current estimate of new business sponsorship of the Arts in 1988-89.

Mr. Luce: The level of business sponsorship has been steadily increasing, especially following the introduction of the business sponsorship incentive scheme in 1984. The estimate for 1988-89 is that the sponsorship figure will be over £30 million.

Free Library Service

60. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps he proposes to take to protect the free basic library service.

Mr. Luce: The Government are committed to maintaining the free basic public library service to individuals. Broadly, this comprises reference services available to all, and the lending of books and other printed material to those who live, work or are in full-time education in a library authority's area.

Byre Theatre, St. Andrews

62. Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Minister for the Arts if he will pay a visit to the Byre theatre, St. Andrews.

Mr. Luce: I have no plans at the moment to visit the Byre theatre.

Theatres

63. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Minister for the Arts how many new theatres have been opened in the last three years.

Mr. Luce: The Office of Arts and Libraries does not maintain records on this subject. The available information indicates that six new theatres have been opened in the last three years, with a further theatre due to open at the end of the year. In addition, at least six theatres have reopened, and at least six more have been extensively refurbished.

National Collections

64. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Minister for the Arts what further discussions he has had with the trustees of national collections about the display of items held in store.

Mr. Luce: I take every reasonable opportunity to encourage the national museums and galleries to ensure that as much of their collection as is practicable is on display, either in the institutions themselves or on loan to others.

TRANSPORT

EC (Transport Ministers)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met his counterparts from the other European Community countries; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Channon: On 25 April at an informal meeting for Transport Ministers. There was general discussion aimed at identifying transport issues likely to be significant during the 1990s.

London Underground (Escalators)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will issue a direction to London Regional Transport to install transparent skirting boards on escalators on the London underground.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. LRT has a statutory duty to have due regard to safety. It is for LRT to make proposals for specific measures which may be necessary in the light of the lessons learnt following the King's Cross fire and the findings of the formal investigation.

Qualified Drivers (Retesting)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has had on the periodic retesting of all qualified drivers; whether he now has any plans for such testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: All newly qualified drivers are strongly encouraged to continue to develop their driving skills and, after gaining experience, to undertake a further driving test such as those organised by the Institute of Advanced Motorists and ROSPA.

We are quite frequently asked to consider periodic retesting of all drivers. It is not considered that the considerable resources required to retest all drivers on a routine basis would be justified by a significant improvement in the number of road casualties.

The recently published report of the road traffic law review contains a recommendation that there should be increased use of orders for retesting of those drivers guilty of offences showing serious deficiencies in their driving skills or attitudes. The Government are considering this report.

Yelloway Motor Services

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether, in the light of the transcripts of the north-west traffic commissioner's hearing against Yelloway Motor Services plc, a copy of which has been sent to him, he remains satisfied that this company and its holding company are fit and proper to hold a public service vehicle licence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The award of public service vehicle operator's licences is a matter for the trafic commissioner. The commissioner for the north-west traffic area decided, following an inquiry on 28 March, to renew the operator's licence for Yelloway Motor Services on condition that the number of vehicles was reduced to 30, no more than eight of which were double-deck vehicles. He also restricted the number of local services which it could operate to 18.

Sandbank Road Crossing, Towyn

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the unprotected Sandbank road rail crossing at Towyn complies with the minimum safety standards for such crossings.

Mr. David Mitchell: The railway inspectorate has been consulted about the use of this crossing on a number of occasions. The level crossing was originally provided to connect lands on either side of the railway which were severed when the railway was built. Since the 1930s when the land was developed for holiday caravans and as an amusement park the use of the crossing has expanded and today it has during the holiday season a high pedestrian use. Despite the growth in use the crossing is considered to meet the minimum acceptable safety standard.

The statutory requirement upon British Rail is to maintain gates normally closed across the road. In addition, special pedestrian gates have been provided and there are signs warning pedestrians to beware of trains. The Department has no powers to direct that changes should be made to the crossing, but it is understood that the possibility of providing a footbridge is being reconsidered by British Rail and the local authority.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Personal Health Information

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress he has made with the order which establishes a code of confidentiality in relation to personal health information; when he expects the consultation period concerning the wording of the order to be complete; what major points are hindering its finalisation; when he expects to announce the date when individuals can have access to their own health information; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Confidentiality of personal health information is protected by professional codes of ethics. A code embracing the principles of these professional codes without displacing them was requested by an interprofessional working group of health care professional interests. The group has not yet been able to secure agreement on a code from the professions represented on the group who would be responsible for implementing it. Before a code could be introduced the Department would wish to consult with health authority management and other bodies with an interest. The code is about the protection against the disclosure of information to others. It does not concern access by individuals to their own information.

Private Nursing Homes

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether private nursing homes and residential homes for the elderly were required to provide occupational therapy as well as nursing care before being recognised; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: A person registered under the Registered Homes Act 1984 in respect of a nursing home is required to make suitable arrangements for the daily activity of residents, according to their needs and capacities and occupational therapy services may be available from the local social services authority or the health authority.

A person registered under the Act in respect of a residential care home also has to make such arrangements. Any nursing care required in residential care homes should be provided by the local community nursing service or under their supervision.

Housing Benefit

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when water charges were excluded from the scope of housing benefit; and why.

Mr. Portillo: Help with water charges was previously provided through the supplementary benefit scheme, in some cases paid by the local authority along with housing benefit under a special administrative arrangement. This separate provision for water rates ceased from 11 April this year as part of the simplification of the benefit system. However, when setting income support levels, account was taken of the overall amount spent in supplementary benefit on water charges.

Supplementary benefit claimants who were entitled to help with water rates, however paid, will, where necessary, receive transitional protection which took account of the water rates element.

Day Patients

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the day-patient attendance rate for the over 65s in each north-west health authority and in Greater London.

Mrs. Currie: Information, including the age of patients admitted to a hospital bed for treatment as a day case and regular day admissions, will be available centrally for the first time later this year. For patients using NHS day care facilities, the specialty function classification will provide some indication of the age groups using the facility.

Family Policy Studies Centre

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, when the director of the Central Statistical Office places in the Library copies of the correspondence the Government have had with the Family Policy Studies Centre, the replies from the centre will be lodged at the same time.

Mr. Portillo: Copies of all the relevant correspondence have, with the authors' agreement, been placed in the Library.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what benefits his Department treats as being subsumed under the classification of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Portillo: Prior to the reforms, supplementary benefit comprised payments of supplementary pension or allowance, single payments when these were made and, where relevant, housing benefit supplement. Although technically supplementary benefit, housing benefit supplement was calculated and paid by local authorities as a top-up to housing benefit.

Social Security Legislation (Effects)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the effects of the new social security legislation in its first month of operation.

Mr. Scott: Final conclusions must await the outcome of the monitoring mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 22 April, at column 602.

Funerals

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make an estimate of the number of instances in which the total cost of a funeral has been paid from funds provided by social security offices since the abolition of the death grant in April 1987.

Mr. Portillo: A total of 18,295 full awards of funeral payments have been made in the period 6 April 1987 to 8 April 1988.

Form AG1

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pages in length is form AG1 which is required to be completed by patients wishing to obtain financial assistance with National Health Service prescriptions, dental treatment, and spectacles; how long he estimates that it would take an ably sighted person to complete it; how long it takes his Department's staff to scrutinise a form; how many staff are engaged in this operation; how much each form and explanatory notes costs to produce and print; and whether he has any plans to simplify form AG1.

Mr. Portillo: Form AG1 needs to be completed only by people applying for help with NHS charges and the cost of travel to hospital for treatment if they are not already automatically entitled to such help because they are receiving income support or family credit. The form covers a variety of possible situations, so that many claimants will need to fill in only a limited number of its parts. How many of the questions have to be answered and the length of time it will take to complete the form, will depend on the circumstances of each individual claimant. Similarly this will determine the length of time taken in scrutinising the forms in the Department.

Form AG1 is one of a series of new personal claim forms based on extensive research which showed that the key factor in how people deal with forms is how clear or complicated individual pages are, rather than the overall length of the form. It is designed to be as comprehensive as possible and to minimise the need for further inquiries which were often necessary with the old forms. Form AG1 also replaces a number of separate forms which previously had to be completed to claim help with individual NHS charges.

A total of 315 staff are currently engaged on the assessment of claims on form AG1. The cost of each form, together with the accompanying explanatory notes and reply-paid envelope, is 15·1p.

We have no plans at present to modify the form, but will be keeping it under review in the light of practical experience.

Pension Age and Retirement

Sir David Price: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Eastleigh on 24 November, Official Report, columns 181-82, he expects to conclude the study of the cost and economic implications of changes in pension age which started in 1986; and if he will publish the conclusions;

(2) what progress is being made in bringing about the decade of retirement proposed in the Green Paper entitled "Reform of Social Security," Cm. 9518, of June 1985.

Mr. Scott: At present I have nothing further to add to my replies to my hon. Friend on 24 November at columns 181-82, except to emphasise that all the various options for change are being considered.

Health Authorities (Disputes)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has any plans to reform the procedures governing disputes between the British Medical Association and local health authorities; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many employment disputes are current between local health authorities and the British Medical Association; what has been the average time for settlement of such disputes over the past five years; and what is the average cost to the Health Service in locum salaries, ex gratia settlements and administrative costs of such disputes.

Mr. Newton: Procedures governing disputes between health authorities and recognised NHS staff organisations are a matter for each individual health authority. The General Whitley Council is responsible for general provisions relating to such procedures. I understand it has no plans at present to revise these provisions. However, the council is currently reviewing its agreement on procedures relating to individual employee grievances with a view to possible changes.

The detailed information requested is not collected centrally.

Autistic Children

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what special measures he will take to assist single parents of children who are autistic and mentally handicapped where such parents find themselves in a poverty trap under his Department's new regulations.

Mr. Scott: Under the reformed structure of income-related benefits introduced in April we have removed the anomaly whereby earning more can actually make a low-paid family in full-time work worse off because of benefit withdrawal. This removes one of the worst features of the poverty-trap.

Mr. Barry Jones: to ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the annual estimated cost of caring for a nine-year-old autistic and mentally handicapped, hyperactive child in (a) a hospital and (b) a registered home;

(2) What payments would be made weekly to foster parents who would care for a nine-year-old autistic, mentally handicapped, hyperactive child;

(3) what payments a married woman would receive under income support when caring for her nine-year-old mentally handicapped, hyperactive, autistic child, assuming her husband earned £20,000 per annum; what back pay on income support she would be eligible for; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The cost of caring for any handicapped person either in a hospital or residential care setting will vary according to his or her individual needs. Costs of care will be affected by such factors as treatment and support provided, day time occupation and leisure activities.

A boarding-out allowance can be paid by a local authority in respect of a child in care placed with foster parents. In addition, if the appropriate eligibility criteria are satisfied a foster parent can qualify for attendance allowance and invalid care allowance, and receive mobility allowance on behalf of the child.

It is unlikely that a woman in these circumstances would be entitled to supplementary benefit, and the question of back pay would not arise. However, if the hon. Member is referring to a specific case, and provides me with more details of it, I shall write to him.

Pensioners

Mr. Barry Jones: to ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside dated 15 December 1987 regarding the British Pensioners and Trade Union Action Association—Wales Pensioners.

Mr. Portillo: My noble Friend wrote to the hon. Member on 5 May 1988.

Waiting Lists

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the research studies referred to in paragraphs 5 and 8 of his Department's statistical bulletin of 2 June 1988 on hospital waiting lists and in the explanatory notes attached to the bulletin, indicating when those studies were carried out and the district health authorities examined by the researchers concerned.

Mr. Newton: The principal studies referred to are listed in the table and provide the information requested.

6. Yates, J. (1987). Why Are We Waiting?, Oxford 11-12.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will give for each regional health authority, district health authority and special health authority, the number of qualified medical secretaries contracted from agencies;

(2) how much has been paid by the National Health Service to agencies for contracting qualified medical secretaries for each regional health authority, district health authority, special health authority and for England as a whole in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not held centrally.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the first-year cost of transitional protection (a) under the social security changes implemented in April and (b) under the further modifications he announced on 27 April.

Mr. Scott: Estimates of the information requested are (a) rather more than £200 million and (b) about £100 million.

Pathology Laboratories

Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-East on 3 May, he will place in the Library a copy of the report commissioned by the manpower planning advisory group on the staffing of pathology laboratories.

Mr. Newton: This report has not yet been published. A copy will be placed in the Library when the report is issued to health authorities and other interested parties.

Day Centres (Disabled Workers)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultation he has had with the local authority associations on the implications for local authorities of the social security changes effective from 11 April in regard to physically disabled people working in day centres; how many local authorities have had to abolish payments to disabled workers as an alternative to closing day centres down; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: Disabled people who receive income support and who are entitled to the disability premium are now entitled to a higher (£15) disregard if they work part time. Prior to 11 April they were entitled to a £4 disregard. Additionally, those whose earning capacity is reduced to 75 per cent. or less of what they could otherwise earn, may work an unlimited number of hours and remain entitled to benefit. We have not consulted local authorities on the implications of these changes, which are entirely beneficial to the individual claimant. We are not aware of any local authority abolishing payments to disabled workers as a result of these changes.

Doctors and Dentists (Merit Awards)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he plans to implement the recommendations on merit awards of the review body on doctors' and dentists' remuneration.

Mr. Newton: The report of the Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration suggests a number of changes to the distinction award system, and urges the health departments and the profession to consider whether the system can be improved in these or other ways. We are considering the implications of the recommendations which we will wish to discuss with the profession.

Cosmetic Surgery

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of hospital and community health services expenditure was attributable to cosmetic surgery in each of the last five years.

Mr. Newton: I reget that this information is not held centrally.

Withington Hospital (Detoxification Unit)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the closure of the detoxification unit at Withington hospital, Manchester, and the proposed withdrawal of the in-patient facility at the hospital's alcoholism treatment unit.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 27 April 1988]: Responsibility for the provision of patient services at Withington hospital, Manchester is a matter for South Manchester health authority in conjunction with the North Western regional health authority. I have made inquiries and I understand that discussions on the future of the unit are at a very early stage. No decisions will be made on major changes in the service for alcoholism unless and until it can be shown that adequate replacement services can be provided at alternative locations.

"From Black to White"

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many copies of the recent dental postgraduate medical video entitled "From Black to White" were made and distributed; at whom they were specifically targeted; and what was the nature of the final distribution;

(2) what instructions he has given to dental reference officers in respect of the new treatment philosophy outlined in the dental video entitled "From Black to White"; if his Department has issued any guidance in relation to the use of the dental probe in examinations as recommended in the video; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what was the total cost of producing and distributing the dental postgraduate medical video entitled "From Black to White"; and if this cost will be met out of additional resources or out of existing allocations to postgraduate dental education.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The video "From Black to White" is the first in a series being produced by the British Postgraduate Medical Federation on behalf of the Department as a distance learning programme for the continuing postgraduate education of dentists. It is specifically targeted at those who do not regularly attend postgraduate training courses. Some 13,150 copies were made and are being distributed to practices providing treament under NHS general dental services in Great Britain at a cost of approximately £100,000.

The programme is being funded through additional money specially allocated to help in implementing the report of the committee of inquiry into unnecessary dental treatment was concerned that dentists should be encouraged to adopt a preventive approach. Whilst, as the committee pointed out, criteria for clinical intervention are primarily a matter for the profession the Department is taking a number of initiatives, of which production of the new video series is one, to encourage dentists to undergo regular updating training.

Dental reference officers are provided with suitable training to enable them to keep up to date with current clinical developments including minimal intervention techniques and methods of prevention. They have also been given guidance on the use of probes in dental examinations.

Medical Research

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest available figures for (a) the comparative levels of spending on medical research and general medical and clinical services on the National Health Service, and (b) the percentage of spending on medical research by the Medical Research Council and the National Health Service and the percentage change in these figures since 1980-81.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 4 May 1988]: (a) In 1986-87, the latest year for which the figures are available, the total expenditure on medical research programmes funded by the Department of Health and Social Security, including the National Health Service locally organised research scheme amounted to £51·8 million. Total spending on general medical and clinical services in the same year amounted to £10,317·2 million.

(b) The table shows the information available.

	1980-81		1986-87		Change
	cash £ million	percentage	cash £ million	percentage	cash £ million	percentage
Total	98·2		147·3
Medical Research Council	92·9	94·6	137·6	93·4	+44·7	+48
NHS Locally Organised Research	5·3	5·4	9·7	6·6	+4·4	+83

The Medical Research Council receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science.

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the latest available figure for the number of individual research programmes and projects supported by the Medical Research Council and National Health Service; and what is the percentage change since 1980-81.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 4 May 1988]: In January 1987, the latest date for which an estimate is available, approximately 850 research projects were being supported under the NHS locally organised research scheme. A comparable figure is not available for 1980-81.

I understand that information about the number of individual research programmes and projects supported by the Medical Research Council, which is funded by grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science, is included in the council's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the number of enterprise initiative consultancies sponsored by his Department in the United Kingdom as a whole; and how many companies in the Tayside region will be eligible for such consultancy work.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: From the launch of the enterprise initiative on 13 January to 22 April, we approved 1,649 applications for assisted consultancy following an initial business review by an enterprise counsellor.

All private sector manufacturing and service firms, in the Tayside region as elsewhere, with under 500 employees (or which are members of groups with under 500 employees) are eligible for such consultancy projects.

Electrical Safety Campaign

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about the electrical safety campaign launched on 25 April.

Mr. Butcher: The electrical safety campaign launched on 25 April is aimed at reducing the numbers of people killed or seriously injured each year by electrocution or fires caused by electrical faults. The main focus of the campaign is to encourage people to install and use residual current devices (RCDs). These are potentially life-saving devices that operate by switching off the current almost immediately when they detect a fault. The campaign will run for 12 months and has started with the publication of a new consumer leaflet, the distribution of a promotional video, the opening of an RCD "helpline" and information bureau, and various other promotional techniques.

Managed Workshops

Mr. Bevan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress he has made on the introduction of managed workshops.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to announce the completion of the first managed workshop.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are inviting companies to "adopt" workshops in inner city areas by investing directly in the projects or by providing land, buildings or experienced managers to give business support on site. English Estates is looking for as much private sector involvement as possible and is currently investigating around a dozen projects in a variety of locations. The first project is expected to be ready for occupation early in 1989.

Inner Cities

Mr. Steen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what specific steps he is taking to encourage business expansion and increased employment in the inner cities.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he is taking to increase employment in the inner cities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Britain's economic success is the key to encouraging business expansion and employment in inner cities. Government action to encourage enterprise and job opportunities in these areas covers a range of programmes and initiatives amounting to some £3,000 million in 1988-89. Specific measures to encourage business expansion include additional support for inner city small firms under the enterprise initiative, extra small firms offices, a major new programme run by English Estates to provide managed workshop space and regional enterprise grants to support innovation and investment for very small firms (under 25 employees) in development areas. Specific employment measures include more MSC and employment service staff working in local communities advising and helping residents, new information points to guide people on training and jobs, new measures to involve employers in training and training projects aimed at specific job opportunities promoted by inner city task forces in co-operation with organisations such as the Industrial Society.

European Community (Ministerial Meetings)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he next expects to meet his counterparts from other EEC states; and what matters he hopes to discuss.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My colleagues and I regularly meet our counterparts from other EC member states, in meetings of the Council of Ministers, in bilateral discussions, and in other international fora. At present I expect to attend the Industry Council planned for 27 May and 24 June, which is expected to discuss the future of the European Coal and Steel Community's steel production quota regime, and the Research Council on 29 June, which will discuss the Community's R and D policies. I also expect to meet Community colleagues at the EUREKA conference in Copenhagen on 15-16 June.

Aerospace

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the trade balance of the aerospace industry in (a) 1987 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Atkins: The positive trade balance of the aerospace industry rose from £1·9 billion in 1986 to £2·4 billion in 1987.

Afcor Investments

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he intends to prosecute the directors of Afcor Investments for employing unlicensed dealers in breach of the Prevention of Fraud (Investment) Act 1958.

Mr. Maude: My Department is considering the affairs of Afcor Investments Ltd. If the hon. Member has any information suggesting that dealers at Afcor were unlicensed he should supply it.

VR Shipping

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, pursuant to his answer of 3 May to the hon. Member for Sunderland, South, what procedures constitute the full standard investigations carried out into the credit worthiness of companies by the Export Credits Guarantee Department; and what collateral was provided by VR Shipping on its ferry contract.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The investigation by the ECGD into the creditworthiness of VR Shipping comprised the obtaining and analysis of information on the company's financial background and current standing. Collateral was provided by a mortgage on each ship and the provision of third party guarantees.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Meat Processing Industry

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps are being taken by the EEC to ensure that the meat processing industry secures meat at prices competitive with imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: In January 1988 the Commission reintroduced sales of bone-in hindquarters from intervention for processing and reduced the price of forequarter meat by 10 per cent.

In February the Commission gave the following undertaking to the Agriculture Council:

"The Commission recognises the need to ensure that additional supplies of beef are available to the community meat processing industry on terms that enable Community production to be competitive with products from other sources. It will make additional quantities of meat available to processors from intervention stocks on terms which will take into account, as far as possible, the prices and other conditions which existed previously."

As far as we are aware, the Commission's sales policy in respect of meat for the processing industry has not given rise to problems of competition, except as regards high meat content canned beef products. My officials have made representations to the Commission services urging them to honour the undertaking given to the Council by making meat available to this part of the processing sector at prices which will enable it to compete with imports from third countries. We currently await the Commission's reaction.

Food (Disposal and Destruction)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the amount of cash to be used by Her Majesty's Government from their own resources on the disposal and destruction of food in the current year; and what were the comparable figures in each of the previous five years.

Mr. MacGregor: Expenditure in the United Kingdom on disposal and destruction of food[1] is as follows:

Year	£ million
1988-89	702
1987-88	694
1986-87	867
1985-86	650
1983-84	657

Note [1]: Comprises export refunds (net of MCAs), subsidies for internal disposals, losses on sale out of intervention and depreciation of stocks.

This expenditure is reimbursed from the Community budget to which the United Kingdom is a net contributor. The Exchequer therefore funds all the United Kingdom's disposal costs and a proportion of those in other member states.

Beef

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current total of beef in private and public intervention; and what were the comparable figures in mid-1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: A note setting out the volume of public intervention stocks and stocks under aided private storage in the EC and the United Kingdom, which includes figures for beef, is deposited in the Library of the House and is updated on a monthly basis.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the current common support levels for beef, expressed in £ sterling; and what were the comparable figures in mid-1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The following are the common price levels in ecus per 100kg at which forequarters are currently bought into intervention and the levels at which they were bought in mid-1986. The sterling equivalents appear in brackets, but do not represent common price levels since the representative (or green) rate used to convert ecus into sterling produces the support level obtained in the United Kingdom only. The actual sterling price paid in the United Kingdom is lower than those shown because a deduction is made proportionate to the value of the variable premium, currently £18·66 per 100kg and £16·69 per 100kg in 1986. The qualities shown are not all bought in each member state.

Radioactivity (Skipton)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library the results of the surveys of deposition of radioactivity in the Skipton area of Yorkshire following the Chernobyl fallout.

Mr. Donald Thompson [pursuant to his reply, 15 March 1988, c. 525]: The Institute of Terrestial Ecology has now completed its further study of radio-caesium deposition in north Yorkshire and copies of its report are being placed in the Library of the House today.

EMPLOYMENT

YTS

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, of those YTS managing agents who received provisional ATO status at the end of their first monitoring period, (a) how many were awarded full status after a further monitoring period, (b) how many withdrew application, (c) how many were rejected after a further monitoring period and (d) what other outcomes there were.

Mr. Cope: Of the 1,715 managing agents who had been awarded provisional ATO status after the first monitoring period (which ended on 31 July 1987), 1,353 had been awarded full status, 90 had withdrawn, and seven had been rejected, by 31 March 1988. Two hundred and sixty-five decisions are awaited, most of which will be taken by mid-May.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, of those YTS managing agents who applied for ATO status, how many, at the end of the first monitoring period, (a) received full status, (b) received provisional status, and (c) were rejected; and of those that were rejected at area manpower board level, how many were awarded provisional status on appeal to the youth training board.

Mr. Cope: Of the 3,184 YTS managing agents who applied for ATO status by 30 September 1986, 1,393 were awarded full status, 1,712 provisional status, and 14 were rejected, by 31 July 1987. In addition, 64 withdrew, and one decision is still outstanding.

There is no right of appeal to the youth training board against rejection, but 12 rejected organisations requested the chairman of the MSC to review their cases. After taking advice from a panel of area manpower board chairmen, the chairman decided to award provisional status in three cases.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many YTS managing agents were under contract to the Manpower Services Commission on 1 April 1986; and, of these, how many applied for approved training organisation status.

Mr. Cope: Contracts between the Manpower Services Commission and managing agents are agreed locally. There is no central record of the number of such contracts at 1 April 1986. However, all managing agents with contracts to provide YTS from 1 April 1986 were required to become approved training organisations by 30 September 1986. The number of such applications was 3,184.

Tourism (Grants)

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government in relation to requiring those receiving grant under tourist board allocations to return the sums granted under certain circumstances; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: In assisting tourism projects under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969, the English tourist board has made increasing use of grants which are repayable if the project achieves minimum performance targets. I have asked the board to seek to increase further its use of repayable forms of assistance.

The ETB may also reclaim assistance paid in cases where the offer conditions have been breached. In the 1987-88 financial year ETB agreed to seek reclaim of assistance totalling £263,000.

Thorpe Hall, Peterborough

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on progress of the drystone wall being constucted under the community programme around Thorpe hall in Peterborough.

Mr. Nicholls: I understand that work on the drystone wall under construction at Thorpe hall is progressing satisfactorily, and it is expected that the wall will be completed in June this year.

Blind and Deaf Persons

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has as to the numbers of (a) blind and (b) deaf people in the working population.

Mr. Lee: The only information available which relates specifically to these categories of disability is for those who have chosen to register as disabled under the terms of the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944. In April 1987 the register included 6,768 blind people and 15,541 deaf people.

Docklands (Unemployment Characteristics)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the characteristics of the unemployed in the urban development area of London docklands, including age, gender and previous employment.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The tables show the number of male and female unemployed claimants, by age, in each of the London boroughs which cover the London docklands area, on the latest available date, 14 January 1988. Information on the nature of previous employment of unemployed claimants is unavailable.

Docklands (Restart Interviews)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the average length of a restart interview in the three London docklands boroughs.

Mr. Lee: Surveys have shown that the average length of a restart interview is about 30 minutes. Separate information is not available for specific areas. The length of a restart interview depends on the circumstances of the unemployed person.

Black Employees

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will take steps to seek the remedy of inequality of treatment accorded to black employees, as recommended in the report of the Select Committee on Employment on discrimination in employment (HC. 1986-87.180.)

Mr. Nicholls: The Government's response to the recommendations of the Select Committee report is set out in the "First Special Report on Discrimination In Employment: Observations by the Government on the First Report of the Committee in Session 1986-87," which was published by the Committee on 16 December 1987.

Mines and Quarries Act 1954

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any proposals to introduce legislation to amend the Mines and Quarries Act 1954; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Last December my Department issued a consultative document entitled "Restrictions on Employment of Young People and the Removal of Sex Discrimination in Legislation", which put forward a number of proposals for amending, among other legislation, the Mines and Quarries Act 1954. The Government are giving careful consideration to the responses they have received. Also the Health and Safety Commission, in consultation with the employers and unions, is engaged in drawing up a comprehensive series of regulations and codes under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 which is intended to replace the Mines and Quarries Act 1954 and associated legislation. The new legislation is designed to maintain and improve standards of health and safety and take account of technological developments.

Benefits (Eligibility)

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide details for each region of the number of people referred to the benefit authorities because of doubts about their eligibility which have stemmed from a request by them for a lowest weekly wage or salary, before stoppages, which is considered excessive or unrealistic.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Restart Interviews

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many restart interviews have taken place in each of the standard regions in each month between June 1986 and the most recent date for which information is available.

Mr. Lee: The information requested by employment service regions is shown in the table:

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide details for each standard economic region of the average lowest weekly wage or salary, before stoppages, that unemployed people have said that they would be prepared to accept at restart interviews.

Mr. Lee: The information requested is not available.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, in the light of the Manpower Services Commission report No. 269/S, "An Evaluation of the Impact of Restart Follow-up Interviews on Counsellors and Clients," there are any plans to reorganise the work of restart interviewers in order to reduce the level of stress amongst staff.

Mr. Lee: The report did not conclude that restart counselling, of itself, was a stressful occupation but that some individuals had experienced stress.

One of the recommendations of the report was that restart counselling staff should follow up some of their clients, this improving both the quality of the programme and job satisfaction. As I announced in the White Paper "Training for Employment", follow up is being incorporated into the programme on a national basis in 1988-89.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what methods of monitoring are used to assess the level of stress amongst restart interviewers.

Mr. Lee: It is the responsibility of managers in the employment service to monitor the performance and well-being of their staff on a continuous basis.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if all restart offices use selective procedures in assessing who should be invited to a follow-up interview; and what are the criteria upon which selection is based.

Mr. Lee: In those offices where follow-up interviews are currently taking place, the decision which groups should be invited to interview is a matter for local management.

However, a systematic basis for follow-up is currently being developed for implementation as part of the package of proposals announced in the White Paper "Training for Employment."

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the recommended length of time that restart counsellors are maintained as interviewers.

Mr. Lee: The length of time counselling staff stay in post is a matter to be decided between the individual and local management.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the average number of interviews conducted by restart counsellors per day and per week in each of the standard economic regions for each month between June 1986 and the most recent date for which information is available.

Mr. Lee: The information is not available in the form requested. However, during 1987-88 an average of 45 interviews a week was carried out for each counselling post allocated to the programme. A detailed breakdown for the employment service regions is as follows:

Weekly average number of restart interviews per counselling post—1987-88

Benefit Claims (Fraud)

Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many claimants were found in the recent fraud investigations in the west midlands to have been making claims for benefit to which they were not entitled; what proportion this represents of the total number of benefit claimants in the west midlands; and what is the latest figure for the total number of claimants nationally.

Mr. Lee: In the two recent very successful fraud investigations in the west midlands, a total of 558 claimants withdrew their benefit claims following investigations by my Department. This represents 0·2 per cent. of the total number of people unemployed and claiming benefit in the west midlands region. The national total in March 1988 was 2,564,000.

Labour Statistics

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimate he has made of the total number of jobs lost by business as a result of competition from the enterprise allowance scheme: and if he will give any figures he has for the most recent period.

Mr. Cope: Reliable information on the number of jobs lost by business as a result of competition from the enterprise allowance scheme is extremely difficult to obtain and no figures are currently available. Work is continuing on how the displacement effect of increased competition from new businesses might be measured.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Staff Statistics

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, what was the percentage of the House of Commons Commission employees registered as disabled on the payroll for each year since its inception.

Mr. Beith: The figures requested are as follows:

Registered Disabled Employees as a percentage of Total Employees

	Percentage
1979-80	0·9
1980-81	1·0
1981-82	1·0
1982-83	1·0
1983-84	1·1
1984-85	1·0
1986-87	0·8

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many individuals officially registered as disabled have been engaged by the House of Commons Commission in each year since its inception.

Mr. Beith: The figures requested are as follows:

Number of Newly Engaged Registered Disabled Individuals

	Number
1979-80	3
1980-81	1
1981-82	nil
1982-83	nil
1983-84	1

The Commission's policy on the employment of disabled persons is set out in the fourth annual report of the House of Commons Commission (1981-82).

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many people were employed by the House of Commons Commission in each year since its inception.

Mr. Beith: The numbers of staff employed by the Commission at 1 October in each year since its inception (1978) are as follows:

Year	Numbers
1980	868
1981	879
1982	893
1984	917
1985	934
1986	964
1987	967·5

Notes:
1. The figures include part-time staff.

2. Staff-in-post figures are higher than figures for staff complement (stated in the Commission's reports) eg two half-time staff in post would equate to one post on the complement.

Members' Staff

Mr. Madden: To ask the Lord President of the Council, pursuant to his reply of 28 April, Official Report, column 246, if he will list the names of all those persons currently employed by right hon. and hon. Members on a permanent or temporary basis, showing by which right hon. or hon. Member they are employed, but omitting the information in relation to pass holders originally requested.

Mr. Wakeham: No. It is entirely a matter for right hon. and hon. Members to make their own arrangements as to whom they employ.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Settlement Applications

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many inquiries have been received at British embassies and high commissions in (a) South Africa, (b) Zimbabwe, (c) Canada, (d) Australia and (e) New Zealand for settlement in the United Kingdom by descendants of United Kingdom-born grandparents for each year since 1982 and each month to date in 1988;

(2) from which countries, and in which years, people have entered the United Kingdom in each year since 1971 for settlement on the grounds of United Kingdom ancestry.

Mr. Renton: The information available centrally relates to the numbers of persons accepted for settlement on the grounds of being a Commonwealth citizen with a grandparent born in the United Kingdom. Provisional figures for 1987 are given in the table. Equivalent figures for earlier years can be found in the annual Command Paper "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom" (tables 3 and 4A of the issue for 1986—Cm. 166). South Africa is not a member of the Commonwealth and therefore citizens of that country cannot obtain settlement in this way.

Numbers of Commonwealth citizens with a UK-born grandparent accepted for settlement in the United Kingdom — 1987

Nationality	On arrival	On removal of time limit
Australia	1,740	250
Canada	420	80
New Zealand	1,700	360
Zimbabwe	90	50
Other	80	30
All nationalities	4,020	770

Working Holidays

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications have been received at posts overseas for an entry certificate or visa over the past 10 years under the working holidaymaker provision; how many of the applicants were granted entry certificates or visas on that basis and how many were refused, for each year; and what is the average length of time taken to arrive at a decision on such an application.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information leaflets for people who inquire about working holidaymaker provisions are available; what form of evidence is required to prove that applicants will not have recourse to public funds, as required by the rule; what happens to such applications where there is no United Kingdom sponsor; and if inquiries are conducted in the United Kingdom of a sponsor in cases of such applications.

Mr. Renton: There are no information leaflets on working holidays, but entry clearance officers are always ready to give advice about the arrangements. In deciding whether applicants qualify for entry clearance or leave to enter, account is taken of available funds and whether there is a reasonable prospect of their finding work to help support themselves. Sponsorship is not obligatory, though, where reliance is placed upon it, suitable inquiries may be made if that is considered necessary.

Firearms

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to announce the compensation scheme for firearms that may be made illegal under the Firearms (Amendment) Bill, presently before the House.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Shortly.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total number of firearms clubs currently approved by his Department; how many are (a) rifle clubs and (b) pistol clubs; and how many that have been given approval come under the control of (i) the National Rifle Association, (ii) the National Small Bore Rifle Association and (iii) the National Pistol Association.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: About 8,000 clubs are approved under section 11 of the Firearms Act 1968. The detailed information requested is not readily available.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to how many firearm certificates (a) he granted, (b) he varied and (c) he renewed to persons who had not completed a minimum of 6 months' probationary period with a firearms club for the purpose of shooting rifle or pistol/revolver at targets only on Ministry of Defence approved ranges.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Thames Valley that information in the form requested is not available. With regard to probationary membership generally, I would refer the hon. Member to the reply to his question on 31 March, at column 446.

Dunmore Shooting Centre Club

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will set out in the Official Report what was stated in writing by the secretary of the Dunmore Shooting Centre Club on the RCI application for the approval of a rifle club by his Department which was granted on 16 September 1986, to the numbered question 6, "The club has regular use of the following ranges", and, for "type of firearm.";

(2) if he will set out in the Official Report what was stated in writing by the secretary of the Dunmore Shooting Centre Club on the RCI application for the extension of a rifle club by the Secretary of State, which approval was extended and granted on 15 February, to the numbered question 6, "The club has regular use of the following ranges," and, for "type of firearm."

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not the practice to disclose the contents of individual applications.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the typographical error regarding the date of the extension of his Department's approval of the Dunmore Shooting Centre Club in his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East on 31 March, Official Report, column 687, was made in his Department or by the Thames Valley police.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The error, for which I apologise, was made in my office.

Michael Ryan

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Thames Valley police as to the reasons why he did not make a written application to the out of Thames Valley police authority area club, the Wiltshire Shooting Centre, in connection with the application by the late Michael Ryan dated 14 July 1987 for a variation to his firearms certificate.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. Member to the reply to his question on 31 March, at column 691.

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if, further to his answer to the hon. Member for Londonderry, East, Official Report, 3 May, columns 428-29, he will now call for a report from the chief constable of Thames Valley police as to what date the crime prevention officer who compiled the report dated 27 April 1987 entered details in his pocket book of the date of his visit to inspect the security arrangements for the firearms of the late Michael Ryan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable that the date in question was 23 April 1987.

Special Constabulary

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce rights of appeal for those persons dismissed from the special constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are no plans to introduce a right of appeal for those persons dismissed from the special constabulary. The need for a discipline code for special constables has been consered from time to time. The conclusion has always been that it is neither sensible nor practicable to apply such a code to voluntary, part-time and unpaid officers.

Security Services

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish an annual report on the work of the security services.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Water Authorities (Customer Information)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department at whose initiative the Data Protection Registrar was asked to investigate Yorkshire water authority's practice of selling information about its customers to private mail advertising agencies.

Mr. Renton: I am informed by the Data Protection Registrar that the matter was drawn to his attention by the Bradford Telegraph and Argus. It is the registrar's normal practice to investigate cases which suggest a possible breach of the Data Protection Act.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that the results of the Data Protection Registrar's investigation of Yorkshire water authority's practice of selling information about its customers are made public.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend has no powers to direct the Data Protection Registrar in this matter. I am informed by the registrar that he determines whether or not to give publicity to the results of investigations he undertakes in the light of the circumstances found. No conclusions have yet been reached in this case.

"Spotlight"

Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the implications for broadcasting standards of the decision by the British Broadcasting Corporation to broadcast the programme, "Spotlight", in Northern Ireland which related to the recent killings in Gibraltar.

Mr. Renton: We regret that the BBC came to this decision, but we do not draw general conclusions from it about broadcasting standards.

PRIME MINISTER

NHS (Manchester)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations she has received from the city of Manchester in regard to the National Health Service and the problems of patient care in Manchester's hospitals; what reply she has made; if she will publish the correspondence in the Official Report; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have received a letter from the hon. Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Litherland) enclosing one from Councillor Eileen Kelly, a copy of which was also sent to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Services has now replied to the letter. It is not my usual practice to publish exchanges of this kind.

Engagements

Mr. Haynes: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Mr. Mans: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Ms. Walley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 10 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today, including one with the President of Guyana.

ENVIRONMENT

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Chope: My Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89 are:

	Per cent.
DOE(C)	5
PSA	5

Central DOE has reduced energy costs by about 18 per cent. over the past two years. In the case of PSA energy costs have been reduced by almost 13 per cent. over the same period.

Because of the wide range of operational requirements and types of buildings, it is not feasible to set specific targets for particular forms of energy consumption and investment in energy-efficient lighting equipment forms only part of the steps to be taken to reduce usage.

Rates

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 10 local authorities whose combined precept for rates, county, district and parish, are the highest in England.

Mr. Chope: The table contains the available information for the 10 authorities with the highest combined rates and precepts as requested:

General Rate Poundages 1988-89 (p)

	Poundages
Bolsover	347·73
Sheffield	347·50
North East Derbyshire	343·65
Calderdale	337·86
High Peak	333·31
Chesterfield	332·22
Bradford	331·55
Langbaurgh-on-Tees	330·41
Harlow	327·90
Manchester	327·04

Council Estates (Purchases)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has been informed of any initiatives by housing associations and private developers to purchase council estates or parts of estates.

Mrs. Roe: I am aware that local authorities in many parts of the country have already disposed of houses and flats to housing associations and private developers or are discussing the possibility. The local authorities concerned will be the best source of information.

Water Pipes

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many kilometres of water piping in England and Wales are bitumen-lined.

Mr. Moynihan: I am advised that, as a broad estimate, 200,000 km of water mains in England and Wales are lined with bituminous materials.

Parliament (Women's Toilets)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment on which days, and at what times over the last four weeks, women's toilets off the Committee Room Corridor were cleaned.

Mr. Chope: The lavatories were cleaned between the following times, (a) Monday to Thursday, 6.00-8.30 am, noon-1 pm, 2.30-3.30 pm, and 8 pm and the House rising; (b) Friday 6-8.30 am, noon-1 pm and 2.30-3.30 with two exceptions. On Monday 11 April the fourth clean was omitted and on Monday 2 May no cleaning took place. No cleaning was carried out on Saturdays and Sundays. The frequency of the cleaning was in accordance with the terms of the contract.

European Community (Ministerial Meetings)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met his ministerial counterparts with responsibility for local government from the other European Community states; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Chope: Common interests in matters concerning local government in European states go wider than the European Community. Discussion of such issues takes place in the forum of the Council of Europe. Meetings of local government Ministers take place about every two years. The next will be in September.

Business Expansion Scheme (Housing)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being taken to ensure that the business expansion scheme housing provisions are not used to produce sub-standard housing and insecure tenancies.

Mrs. Roe: To qualify for tax relief under the scheme dwellings would need to be fit for human habitation and to have all the standard amenities within the meaning of the Housing Act 1985. Tenancies would need to be new-style assured tenancies under the Housing Bill which provide long-term security of tenure.

Council House Sales

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of right to buy sales to date since the passing of the Housing Act 1980.

Mrs. Roe: A total of 689,000 dwellings in England had been sold by local authorities, new towns and housing associations under the right-to-buy legislation up to the end of December 1987.

Water Companies Association

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet representatives of the water companies association; and what matters will be discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has no immediate plans to meet representatives of the Water Companies Association.

Balanced Flue Gas Appliances

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will review the current regulations for the installation of balanced flue gas appliances, in the light of the findings of Midland Environment Ltd. of relatively high concentrations of nitrogen dioxide on estates where large numbers of appliances are installed.

Mr. Trippier: The findings of the report by Midland Environment Limited, together with subsequent, more detailed, research being undertaken at the Building Services Research and Information Association, will be considered as part of the ongoing review of the safety aspects of the building regulations.

Water Authorities (Customer Information)

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the most recent available figure for the amount of income per annum generated by water authorities selling information about their customers to private agencies.

Mr. Moynihan: I have no such information.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that the practice of certain water authorities in selling information about their customers to outside agencies is in the interest of the authorities' consumers.

Mr. Moynihan: None. Like other bodies, water authorities are subject to the provisions of the Data Protection Act.

Housing Association Dwellings

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many housing association dwellings, which were developed with local authority funding but became empty and uninhabitable because the local authority could not finance the necessary major repairs (a) were repaired, with Housing Corporation funding and (b) remained empty, as the Housing Corporation could not finance the necessary major repairs (1) during 1984-85, (2) during 1985-86 and (3) during 1986-87; and if he will give this information (i) for England as a whole, (ii) for Greater London, (iii) for metropolitan areas outside London, (iv) for non-metropolitan areas and (v) for each English local authority area;

(2) how many housing association dwellings, which were originally developed with local authority finance (a) became or (b) remained empty and uninhabitable (1) during 1984-85, (2) during 1985-86 and (3) during 1986-87, as the local authority could not fund necessary major repairs; and if he will give this information (i) for England as a whole, (ii) for Greater London, (iii) for metropolitan areas outside London (iv) for non-metropolitan areas and (v) for each English local authority area;

(3) how many housing association dwellings, developed with local authority funding, are currently empty and uninhabitable because the local authority is unable to finance the necessary major repairs (a) for England as a whole, (b) for Greater London, (c) for metropolitan areas outside London, (d) for non-metropolitan areas and (e) for each English local authority area.

Mrs. Roe [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The information is not available in the form requested. However, a Housing Corporation survey in June 1985 indicated that 745 housing association dwellings mortgaged to local authorities in England were vacant because of a need for major repairs. During the years in question Housing Corporation funding was not normally available for major repair to housing association dwellings originally developed with local authority finance, although the corporation has now been authorised to fund repairs wherever the local authority is genuinely unable to do so itself on condition that the dwellings are then let to homeless people.

Rating Reform

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he received the Price Waterhouse report on administering the community charge; and if he will announce the arrangements he is making to disseminate the report.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 9 May 1988]: I expect to receive this report shortly and will consider then how best to disseminate its findings.

Departmental Responsibilities (Staff Allocation)

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the allocation of staff to the areas of responsibility of his Department of (a) housing, (b) local government and (c) environmental protection and research for each year since 1974 for which figures are available.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The table shows the information for each year since 1983. The information is not readily available for earlier years.

Department of the Environment (Central)
Staff numbers from 1 April 1983 to 1 April 1988

Command	1 April 1983	1 April 1984	1 April 1985	1 April 1986	1 April 1987	1 April 1988
Housing and Construction (including Rent Assessment Panels)	374	346	377·5	388·5	1296	1328
Local Government and Local Government Finance	133·5	152·5	207·5	213	200	207
Environment Protection	1,066	1,022	1,015·5	1,044·5	232	227

Notes:
1. The Building Research Establishment (750 staff at 1 April 1987) transferred from the Environmental Protection command to the Housing command during 1986-87.
2. The Department's statistical services were centralised and included in the Housing Command from 1 April 1987.
3. Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution was created on 1 April 1987. Staff numbers for the Environmental Protection Command at 1 April 1987 and 1 April 1988 do not include staff in the Inspectorate.
4. The totals for Environmental Protection exclude Staff working on Water topics.
5. Staff working on research are shown against the area of work for which the research is undertaken, except for BRE which is included against Environmental Protection up to 1 April 1986 and Housing thereafter.

Houses (Multiple Occupation)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures he intends to bring forward to monitor and regulate the use of bed-and-breakfast accommodation and houses in multiple occupation should the proposed Housing Bill become law.

Mr. Waldegrave: We do not propose to introduce any specific procedures for this purpose.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Student Support

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he is yet in a position to make a statement on his proposals for the reform of student financial support.

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to announce his proposals for the reform of the system of student financial support.

Mr. Jackson: The Government will determine their policy in the light of the conclusions of the review of student support. They will publish their proposals for the future of student support in due course.

Pupils (Transport)

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that local education authorities' contracts for transport to school of pupils with special needs are subject to strict enforcement of adequate provisions, concerning overcrowding of vehicles, use of safety harnesses and adult escorts for young people.

Mr. Dunn: Contracts for the provision of school transport are a matter for local education authorities and the relevant transport contractors, not for my right hon. Friend.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what financial allowances will be made available to children with visual impairments to assist their independent use of public transportation services.

Mr. Dunn: Section 55 of the Education Act 1944 lays down requirements on local education authorities for the provision of transport for school children. Any additional provision for children with visual handicaps will be matter for individual local education authorities.

Cultural Convention

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he has taken to assist in the co-operation of the various institutions concerned with education in Europe along the lines envisaged in the cultural convention.

Mr. Dunn: The aims of the cultural convention are realised through the work of the Council for Cultural Co-operation (CDCC), the steering committee, which has, since 1962, been responsible for drawing up and implementing the educational and cultural programmes of the Council of Europe. My Department participates actively in the educational work of the CDCC, generally by representation at formal sessions, and specifically by participation in its projects and activities.

The education programme includes (see table) a wide range of work designed primarily to realise ideals through practical co-operation. This includes disseminating new ideas, techniques and achievements among member states and increasing contacts at all levels between their education systems on issues of major, current concern.

European Education Ministers, who meet regularly under the auspices of the Council of Europe, recognise the need to rationalise the educational programmes of international organisations. The CDCC is to discuss this in June, taking account of the 1986 report of the Colombo Commission on European Co-operation beyond 1990. In response to this report, CDCC has been asked to collaborate with other organisations in developing from existing work up a coherent youth education and training action programme to promote in education a European dimension and a commitment to human rights and to the principles of pluralist democracy.

Autistic Children

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what provisions are being made in the national curriculum to ensure that the special needs of autistic children will be adequately met.

Mr. Dunn: Clause 11 of the Education Reform Bill provides that, where a child in England or Wales has a statement of special educational need under the Education Act 1981, the statement may direct where parts of the national curriculum should be modified or, in exceptional cases, disapplied. This provision could be used to meet the particular needs of the autistic child.

GCSE Syllabuses

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he will make a statement about the number of mode 2 and mode 3 GCSE syllabuses scrutinised by the Secondary Examinations Council which have failed to meet the appropriate standard and about those procedures for scrutiny.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: All GCSE syllabuses in use in schools have been approved for 1988 and 1989 examinations against the relevant GCSE national criteria.

The Secondary Examinations Council approved the mode 1 syllabuses in the 20 main subjects, accounting for over 90 per cent. of estimated entries for the 1988 examinations. The GCSE examining groups approved the remaining mode 1 syllabuses, and all mode 2 and 3 syllabuses. The mode 2 and 3 syllabuses are likely to account for less than 5 per cent. of entries. The GCSE examining groups comprise the independent school examination boards, which bore sole responsibility for approving O-level and CSE syllabuses.

For 1990 examinations, all syllabuses in the 20 main subjects, including mode 2 and 3, will need SEC approval. So far the SEC has approved, for 1990 examinations, 19 of about 450 mode 2 and 3 syllabuses in the 20 main subjects which have been brought to its attention. We estimate that about 95 per cent. of entries in that year will be for syllabuses approved by the SEC.

Education Reform

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what measures his Department is taking to ensure an adequate supply of teachers to implement the curriculum proposals of the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 11 January, at column 53; and to my right hon. Friend's reply to my hon. Friend for Pembroke (Mr. Bennett) on 19 January at columns 629-30.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Enterprise Initiative

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to date to the enterprise initiative.

Mr. Atkins: From the launch of the enterprise initiative on 13 January up to 29 April over 70,000 inquiries have been received for the enterprise initiative booklet from firms and intermediaries. In addition, over 32,000 booklets containing more detailed information on the individual initiatives have been issued.

Fibrous Carbon Bonded Thermal Insulation

Mr. Steel: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many licences his Department issued for the export of equipment and technology for manufacture of fibrous carbon bonded thermal insulation to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics prior to the introduction of controls in November 1986;

(2) what criteria were used in drawing up controls on the export of equipment and technology for the manufacture of fibrous carbon bonded thermal insulation.

Mr. Alan Clark: Before the introduction of controls on the export of such insulating material, export licences were not needed to any destination. The criteria used in drawing up the controls reflected our strategic concerns and were adopted by our COCOM partners in the controls agreed multilaterally.

Marine &c. Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any plans to seek to repeal the Marine &c. Broadcasting (Offences) Act 1967; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: We have international treaty obligations to maintain legislation to prevent broadcasting from beyond territorial waters. It is essential to prevent such broadcasting because of the widespread interference it can cause, Far from repealing the 1967 Act, we are considering strengthening its enforcement powers through amendments to be incorporated in the forthcoming Broadcasting Bill.

Baby Walkers

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if, in view of recent accidents, he will make it mandatory for baby walker manufacturers to issue comprehensive instructions with their products.

Mr. Butcher: Research has shown that most baby walker accidents requiring hospital treatment involve a fall down steps or stairs. For this reason the British Standard on baby walkers—BS 4648—which is currently being updated includes a requirement that all baby walkers should carry a permanent label stating "WARNING—Never leave your baby alone in this walker". In addition, the standard specifies that instructions concerning the correct and safe assembly and use of the walker should be provided. The instructions advise users to guard against open fires, stairs and steps and to ensure that floor areas are clear of any obstructions.

My Department will examine the draft revised standard to ensure that it provides an adequate level of safety and if so, it will be considered for approval for the purpose of the general safety requirement provision of the Consumer Protection Act 1987.

National Engineering Laboratory

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to put the security services at the national engineering laboratory, East Kilbride, out to competitive tender; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: The national engineering laboratory, East Kilbride, is currently investigating the available means of reducing the running costs of its security service. The survey includes a comparison with the likely costs of contracting out the service.

Furnishings (Foam Fillings)

Mr. Iain Mills: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether there has been any progress on drafting a standard for foam filling of domestic upholstered furniture during consultation on his Department's draft Furniture and Furnishing (Fire) (Safety) Regulations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Yes. During the consultation period on the draft regulations, agreement has emerged on a draft British Standard specification "The Flammability Behaviour of Single filling Components (Foams or Fibres) Used in Domestic Upholstered Furniture" (document 88/37988) issued by BSI on 12 April. A copy has been placed in the Library. This technical specification will be incorporated in the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations.

This specification has the agreement of my Department, and was drawn up by a BSI committee on which the fire prevention officers and enforcement officers, the foam manufacturers and the furniture manufacturers were represented. Although the consultation period on the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations does not end until 12 May, I believe that, in the interests of clarity and to allow the manufacturers to plan ahead, it is right to make this agreement public in advance of the end of the consultation period. I will be considering all other comments made on the draft regulations after 12 May and will make a further announcement as soon as possible after that date.

Government Research

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on (a) Government spending on all scientific research as a proportion of gross domestic product, (b) Government spending on defence research as a proportion of gross domestic product, (c) Government spending on non-defence research as a proportion of gross domestic product, (d) industrial funding on scientific research as a proportion of gross domestic product, (e) total funding on scientific research as a proportion of gross domestic product, and (f) Government spending on advancement of knowledge as a proportion of gross domestic product, in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) the United States of America, (iii) France, (iv) West Germany and (v) Italy in the period 1979 to 1987.

WALES

Cardiff Bay Barrage Scheme

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1), pursuant to his reply of 3 March, Official Report, column 662, whether initial feasibility studies on the Cardiff bay barrage scheme aided by the European regional development fund have been completed; and if the Government have now reached a view on the barrage proposal;

(2) whether initial feasibility studies on the Cardiff bay barrage scheme aided by the European regional development fund include a study of alternative barrage lines and their relative impact in terms of Government responsibilities with regard to article 4 of the directive 74/409 on the conservation of wild birds.

Mr. Peter Walker: The initial feasibility studies aided by the European regional development fund were completed by November 1986. The studies considered various barrage lines across the mouth of Cardiff harbour and the effect of such a barrage on over-wintering shorebirds. Further economic, technical and ecological studies have been undertaken and these are currently being considered before a Government view on the barrage is reached.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average rate paid by a domestic ratepayer in each Welsh district in 1988-89, together with his estimate for the community charge which would be payable by each payee in 1988-89 had the proposed system been in operation.

Mr. Grist: Illustrative figures are given in the following table:

Community Charge and Average Rate Bill for each Welsh District 1988-89

[1] These figures are provisional and will be updated when better information is received from all local authorities. No allowance has been made for the transitional safety-net arrangements. The calculations are based on present needs assessments, which are under review.

[2] Average rate bills per adult are on a basis comparable with the community charge figures and exclude any use of balances.

Pre-school Playgroup Association

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much cash he has allocated to Clwyd county council in each of the years since April 1979 for PPA. (Wales) in real terms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 9 May 1988]: None. Departmental funding to support the activities of PPA (Wales) at the all-Wales level is made direct, not through local authorities. Funds provided by the Department to Clwyd under the all-Wales mental handicap strategy may be used in approved schemes to fund appropriate activities of voluntary groups, including local PPA groups, but the decision to provide funds for approved schemes, and the level of funding provided, is a matter for the authority to determine.

Infertility Services

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what information he has as to current research undertaken into the needs of the infertile in Wales; what Government funded research is being undertaken into infertility services in Wales; and how much Government cash has been allocated in the past eight years to the health authorities of Wales for National Health Service services for the infertile in Wales.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The needs of the infertile in Wales are similar to those of the infertile elsewhere, and relevant research is being undertaken in many places throughout the world. Within the United Kingdom, the Medical Research Council, which receives the greater part of its funds from the Exchequer, supports a number of projects concerned with fertility, pregnancy and foetal development.

The development of infertility services is kept under constant view by the Welsh Office in co-operation with the health authorities, and relevant professional and other interests. Generally, it is for individual health authorities to determine what proportion of the funds they have been allocated should be spent on services for the infertile. We have, however, allocated special funds to South Glamorgan health authority under the centrally funded developments programme for the development of in vitro fertilisation and embryo transfer services, totalling £29,916 in 1986-87, £48,741 in 1987-88 and £93,935 in 1988-89.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the number of employees in full-time employment in Clwyd for each of the years June 1978 to June 1987; and how many of these were in manufacturing industry.

Mr. Peter Walker [holding answer 9 May 1988]: Data for Clwyd are available for 1978, 1981 and 1984 (census of employment data) only:

Note: Jobcentre and ward-based aggregates are not strictly comparable. The former are based on an amalgamation of jobcentre areas which may not be conterminous with the county boundary and, unlike the ward based aggregates, they include no allowance for non-response and duplication in census returns.

Medical Secretaries

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each district health authority (a) the number of funded establishments for qualified medical secretaries and (b) the number of medical secretaries in post.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 9 May 1988]: (a) This is not available centrally. (b) Information relating to the number of medical secretaries recognised as such by the National Health Service payroll system shows the following in post at 30 September 1987.

District Health Authority	Staff[1]
Clwyd	52·9
East Dyfed	48·8
Gwent	55·2
Gwynedd	53·4
Mid Glamorgan	32·4
Pembrokeshire	10·6
Powys	2·0
South Glamorgan	57·6
West Glamorgan	38·2

[1] Staff in post (whole-time equivalents).

Not all district authorities provide comprehensive and accurate occupation coding, and a number of staff in these pay grades are unallocated. The figures quoted should thus be treated with caution.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give for each district health authority the amount spent on medical secretaries contracted from agencies in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 9 May 1988]: Medical secretaries' expenditure is not classified with health authorities' annual accounts. However, the agency costs incurred by Welsh health authorities for administrative and clerical — typing and secretarial skills, during 1986-87 are as follows:

	£ (thousands)
Clwyd	—
East Dyfed	—

ENERGY

Wave Power

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will review his policy into wave power following the evidence of Professor Stephen Salter to the House of Lords Sub-Committee on the European Communities.

Mr. Michael Spicer: My Department regularly reviews all the renewable technologies taking into account any new development or ideas which may alter previous assessments. All our recent reviews have indicated that research into large-scale offshore wave power would not be cost effective. Copies of the latest review, undertaken as part of a comprehensive appraisal of a wide range of energy technologies was published in 1987 as "Energy Paper 54". Copies are in the Libraries of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chile

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to whether the conditions laid down by the Catholic Church and the 14 opposition parties in relation to the plebiscite have been met by the Government of Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: We have noted the increase in the number of registered voters in Chile and the access to television of the democratic opposition, and hope that both will continue.

Additionally, I refer the hon. Member to the reply of my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray) of 22 April.

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if his Department's advice has been sought concerning the possible sale by British Aerospace of Hawk military aircraft to the Government of Chile; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It has been the policy of successive British Governments not to disclose details of potential defence sales.

Human Rights, Democracy and Territorial Violations

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the representations regarding (a) human rights, (b) pluralistic democracy and (c) territorial violations which Her Majesty's Government have made to other Governments for each year since 1974.

Mr. Mellor: It is not practicable to list all representations made by Her Majesty's Government since 1974. However, in our dealings with other Governments, we regularly raise human rights and territorial violations and make clear our support for a pluralistic democracy as appropriate. Such representations, on human rights for example, are sometimes more productive if undertaken without publicity.

TRANSPORT

Rail Electrification

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of railway track are electrified in each of the standard regions of the United Kingdom; and in each case what percentage that represents of the total length of track.

Mr. David Mitchell: The information requested is not available for standard United Kingdom regions, however the table sets out data for BR regions.

Region	Total track miles	Electrified track miles	Percentage
Eastern	5,386	1,164	22
London Midland	6,186	2,091	34
Scotland	2,718	666	25
Southern	3,044	2,473	81
Western	3,002	—	0
Total	20,336	6,394	31

Motorways (Resurfacing)

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to ensure that future motorways are resurfaced in concrete rather than tarmacadam.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In most cases both forms of construction are suitable. There will be exceptions where engineering needs will dictate a particular form of construction. In those cases where a choice between alternatives is to be made, this will continue to be done on the basis of competitive tendering.

Road Accidents

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he proposes to take in the light of the published road accident figures for 1987.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are pleased that the provisional 1987 figures show pedestrians deaths at the lowest level ever recorded. The figure for road deaths overall is the lowest for 34 years.

Five thousand one hundred deaths are still too many. Our aim is to cut road casualties by a third by the end of the century. This will require unremitting effort and in particular measures to help the most vulnerable groups and to tackle the unacceptably high level of accidents in urban areas.

We shall be working closely with local authorities, with industry and commerce and with the many organisations with a special interest in tackling the problems of death and injury on the road. We welcome the high level of public interest and commitment, and in particular the increasing recognition that we shall have made a great step forward if we can cut out the road deaths associated with alcohol.

Member's Correspondence

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he intends to respond to the hon. Member for Easington's letter concerning his interrogation by Israeli security staff at Heathrow airport on Friday 1 April.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State did so on Monday 9 May.

Institution of Professional Civil Servants

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met representatives of the Institution of Professional Civil Servants involved in transport industries; and what was the content of the discussions.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has not yet met IPCS representatives.

Ammunition Lorries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) when he was first informed of the fire on a lorry loaded with ammunition in the Newport, West constituency that took place on 30 January;

(2) if he will make representations to the United States Army on the safety implications of the recent fire on a lorry loaded with ammunition on 30 January and with regard to the substitution of civilian personnel for Ministry of Defence police as escorts for ammunition lorries at Caerwent in February and the conviction for drunken driving of a civilian driver who was about to collect an ammunition load on 30 March;

(3) if he is notified of collisions, accidents, fires and major breakdowns of lorries loaded with ammunition, by all armed forces stationed in the United Kingdom;

(4) what additional precautions have been introduced to strengthen Statutory Instrument No. 888, Conveyance by Road of Military Explosives Regulations 1977, to protect vehicles from the threat of sabotage or theft by terrorists.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Incidents such as the one on 30 January involving the transport of military ammunition do not have to be reported to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. They are covered by instructions issued by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State on 25 April, at column 75.

Regulation 888 will be revoked by the new regulations referred to in my reply of 18 April, at column 369. This will not affect departmental responsibility for the movement of military ammunition.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Benefits

10. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has had any discussions with interested parties on possible modifications to the new benefits system introduced under the Social Security Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The new benefits system is simpler, fairer and better targeted than the old, and no major modification is called for. To ease the transition, however, my right hon. Friend has announced a package of measures to prevent large cash losses to pensioners, disabled people, widows and families with children at the point of change and to provide some minor easements where the rules seemed to be working unduly harshly.

Independent Living Fund

16. Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what costs of disability will be covered by payments from the Independent Living Fund; and if claimants will be routinely referred to the social fund.

Mr. Scott: The Independent Living Fund is primarily intended to help severely disabled people on low incomes with the cost of employing personal care or domestic assistance. The eligibility criteria which were published on 31 March also empower the trustees to take into account a number of factors, including other care needs, in determining the level of payments to individuals. I expect the trustees will wish to inform applicants of their possible entitlement to other forms of help where appropriate. However the social fund cannot make payments for domestic assistance and respite care.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the first payment to be made from the Independent Living Fund; and what arrangements for interim payments he has made.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Members for Kirkcaldy (Dr. Moonie) and for Barnsley, West (Mr. Patchett) earlier today.

Nurses

18. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on recruitment levels at schools of nursing.

Mrs. Currie: According to information produced by the English National Board for Nursing, Midwivery and Health Visiting in the year 1986-87, a total of 22,825 people entered basic nurse training. At 31 March 1987, there were 61,009 learners undertaking basic nurse training in England.

33. Mr. Rees: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on recruitment levels at schools of nursing.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing) earlier today.

43. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to monitor the implementation of the new clinical grading structure for nurses.

53. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to monitor the implementation of the new clinical grading structure for nurses.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to monitor the implementation of the new clinical grading structure for nurses.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to monitor the effects of the regrading of clinical nurses.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) earlier today.

45. Mr. Evennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received concerning the training of nurses.

Mr. Newton: We have received a number of letters from hon. and right hon. Members, and members of the general public, on a variety of issues relating to nurse training. In addition, the chairman of the United Kingdom Central Council for Nursing, Midwifery and Health Visiting wrote on 19 April expressing the council's desire for an early response to its Project 2000 proposals for reform of nurse education and training. We hope to be able to make a response to these proposals shortly.

Free School Meals

21. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the probable impact of changes in the entitlement to free school meals following the enactment of recent social security legislation in the city of Coventry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: In October 1987, the latest date for which information is available, 15,002 children in the Coventry local education authority area were authorised to receive free school meals. Of these, 83 per cent. came from families in receipt of supplementary benefit. Children from families now in receipt of income support continue to be entitled to free school meals. Many of the other children who previously received free school meals may be from families eligible for family credit, which includes extra cash compensation in place of entitlement to free school meals.

Income Support

22. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many complaints his offices in north Devon have received regarding anomalies in the new support systems for the elderly, infirm or unemployed.

Mr. Portillo: Whilst local offices do not keep records of this kind, we believe that the transitional protection for income support claimants, and the extra protection for many housing benefit claimants announced by my right hon. Friend on 27 April, will remove many of the difficulties for claimants at the time of change in the benefit system.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 122, on what basis it is possible to provide information on disabled claimants who will receive a lower entitlement under income support than they received prior to 11 April.

Mr. Scott: Information on all client groups, including the disabled, will be based on statistics provided by the annual statistical inquiry. This provides information by DHSS region.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his reply of 12 April, Official Report, column 122, how the reformed income-related benefits for the disabled will be monitored.

Mr. Scott: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 22 April at column 602. Information will also be derived from the OPCS survey of disabled people.

Housing Benefit

23. Mr. Loyden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes he expects there to be in the level of housing benefits in the next financial year.

24. Mr. Michael: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes he expects there to be in the level of housing benefits in the next financial year.

26. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes he expects there to be in the level of housing benefits in the next financial year.

31. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what changes he expects there to be in the level of housing benefits in the next financial year.

Mr. Portillo: The level of housing benefits is influenced by a large number of factors including changes in housing costs and household income. Decisions on the uprating of benefits will be announced in the autumn in the normal way.

27. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to alter the threshold and taper in respect of the payment of housing benefits.

30. Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to alter the threshold and taper in respect of the payment of housing benefits.

46. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to alter the threshold and taper in respect of the payment of housing benefits.

55. Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to alter the threshold and taper in respect of the payment of housing benefits.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received following the change in housing benefit regulations; and if he is considering further changes.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Members to the statement made by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services during the debate in the House on 27 April at columns 351-61.

28. Mr. Bidwell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will revise his estimate of the number of losers as a result of the housing benefit changes.

37. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will revise his estimate of the number of losers as a result of the housing benefit changes.

48. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will revise his estimate of the number of losers as a result of the housing benefit changes.

50. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will revise his estimate of the number of losers as a result of the housing benefit changes.

Mr. Scott: The changes announced by my right hon. Friend on 27 April were directed primarily towards reducing the significant cash losses experienced by a comparatively small number of claimants at the point of change. They will have had only a marginal effect on the overall balance between gainers and losers as a result of the social security reforms.

32. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to carry out a further review of the impact of the changes in housing benefit payments.

34. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to carry out a further review of the impact of the changes in housing benefit payments.

42. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to carry out a further review of the impact of the changes in housing benefit payments.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to carry out a further review of the impact of the changes in housing benefit payments.

Mr. Portillo: We shall continue to monitor the introduction of the reformed housing benefit scheme with care.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many local authorities require the national insurance number of claimants for housing benefit; for what purpose; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: We aim in the next few years to use national insurance numbers (NINOs) to provide a standard base for data on all social security benefits administered through DHSS offices. In principle we would envisage housing benefit data being collected on the same basis in the future. We have advised local authorities of this, but have indicated that NINOs are items of personal data requiring careful consideration to ensure their use by authorities is for housing benefit purposes only. We shall be discussing detailed arrangements with the local authority associations. Authorities have been advised, however, that until discussions are concluded they may wish to invite claimants to supply their NINOs if known, but that they should not require claimants to do so.

Social Fund

25. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the first month's full operation of the social fund.

Mr. Scott: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 6 May at column 656.

29. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in Bradford have been refused social fund loans since 11 April to date.

44. Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much in total has been disbursed in community care grants since the new system of social security payments came into operation; what proportion of the total funds available for community care grants this represents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 6 May 1988 at column 656.

Rating Reform

35. Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to reassess the £1·30 weekly contribution towards 20 per cent. average domestic rates included in income support levels.

Mr. Scott: Income support levels will be adjusted from April next year to reflect the average 20 per cent. contribution to the community charge. The precise amounts to be included will be announced at the time of the general uprating statement in the autumn.

Mobility Allowance

36. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend the mobility allowance to existing recipients reaching the age of 75 years.

Mr. Scott: The age 75 limit will not affect any existing recipients of mobility allowance until November 1989. We shall consider, nearer that time, whether it should be extended.

Hospital Waiting Lists

38. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he has given to the Wakefield district health authority over the cancelling of operations because of a shortage of nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: No advice on staffing matters has been given specifically to Wakefield health authority, but health authorities generally have been asked to undertake a variety of measures to improve recruitment and retention of nursing staff.

Health Workers' Unions

39. Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he last met the representatives of the health workers' unions; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Newton: The pay and conditions of service of NHS employees are the subject of negotiation between the management and staff sides of Whitley councils. My right hon. Friend and I have met representatives of a number of individual staff groups and have also held meetings with the health services committee of the TUC. The most recent of these was on 2 February when the subjects discussed included NHS resources, pay and staffing levels, and the Government's internal review of the Service.

NHS (Lotteries)

40. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on his policy towards the use of lotteries to raise funds for the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: We have always welcomed the additional support for health services provided by a wide range of charitable and other organisations through their various fund-raising activities, including lotteries.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

41. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent representations he has received regarding the classification of bronchitis and emphysema as industrial diseases.

Mr. Scott: We have received a report from the industrial injuries advisory council on its investigation into bronchitis and emphysema. We have also received letters from several right hon. and hon. Members.

Mental Hospitals (Closures)

47. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the current progress of closure of mental hospitals as part of his policy for community care.

Mrs. Currie: The Government's policy for the care of mentally ill people is based on a shift to district-based services where in-patient care is complemented by care in the community. The aim is to enable mentally ill people to be provided with whatever services they need with the minimum of formality or delay, without losing touch with their normal lives. The reduction in size of some of the old, badly sited mental illness hospitals and the closure of others is a consequence of achieving that aim and not a precursor, and is preceded by the development of psychiatric services in each district which, at present, may lack them.

Details of closure plans were given in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 13 April at columns 172-74.

St. James's Hospital, Balham

49. Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans now exist for the future use of St. James's hospital, Balham, SW12; and if the will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: We are still considering the proposal to close out-patient services at St. James's hospital, Balham. Until we reach a decision no plans can be developed for the future use of the hospital or its site.

Hospitals (Birmingham)

51. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the consequences for the work of Birmingham hospitals of the entry into fully effective operation of the planned new district general hospital in Solihull.

Mrs. Currie: The development of Solihull district general hospital and other peripheral hospitals is part of the west midlands long-term strategy for increasing the provision of health services on the growing population centres surrounding Birmingham. For detailed information on this strategy my hon. Friend may care to write to the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Child Benefit

52. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of child benefit paid to income taxpayers.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that the cost of child benefit paid to tax-paying families in 1988-89 is likely to be around £3·6 billion.

Domestic Help Additions

54. Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if domestic help additions will continue to be available to suitable claimants making fresh claims after 11 April.

Mr. Scott: Domestic help additions were a feature of the supplementary benefit scheme which, on 11 April was replaced by income support. The new scheme assists people with costs associated with long-term sickness or disability through a system of flat rate premiums. Additionally, we are setting up the Independent Living Fund which will make payments to severely disabled people on low incomes who need to employ help so that they can live independently.

NHS Performance Indicators

56. Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received from the chairmen of the regional health authorities following the publication of the 1986-87 National Health Service performance indicators.

Mr. Newton: None.

Form AG1

57. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services who designed form AG1, issued by his Department.

Mr. Portillo: Form AG1 was produced by professional writers and design staff in the Department. It follows the new house-style which is being introduced for all claim forms and leaflets and other material.

Cost Improvement Programme (Rotherham)

58. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has had any interim report on the Rotherham district health authority's 1988-89 cost improvement programme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The Trent regional health authority's short-term programme for 1988-89 identified planned recurrent cost improvement savings of £0·38 million in Rotherham health authority.

District Health Authorities (Asset Sales)

59. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take to encourage the sale of unwanted assets by district health authorities, in the light of the report published by the Comptroller and Auditor General, "Estate Management in the National Health Service."

Mrs. Currie: Health authorities in England are fully aware of the need and advantages of disposing of all land and property which is surplus to NHS requirements and are actively encouraged to dispose of surplus property with all despatch. Proceeds from sales of surplus properties in England have increased over the last 10 years from £7·5 million in 1978-79 to about £200 million in 1987-88. In this period over 7,000 acres have been disposed of and a further 6,000 are currently awaiting disposal. Some regional health authorities are now raising over £20 million per year from disposals—and, since all proceeds are retained by the NHS for reinvestment in the Service, they are effectively adding 20 per cent. to their capital expenditure programmes.

Cook-Chill System (Wakefield)

60. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the latest estimate of the cost of implementing the cook-chill system of catering in the Wakefield district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Responsibility for implementing cook-chill in Wakefield is a matter for the district health authority. The hon. Member may therefore wish to contact the chairman of Wakefield health authority for the information he is seeking.

Nurses' Pay

61. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the increase in nurses' pay in 1988-89, with particular reference to those in the London area.

Mr. Newton: My right hon. Friend met representatives of the nursing professions at the time of the announcement by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister of the Government's decision on the pay review body's recommendations. These recommendations included the introduction of London pay supplements. The representatives expressed their satisfaction that the Government have decided to implement the recommendations in full and to make available additional resources to cover the full estimated cost.

AIDS

62. Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received about the establishment of needle exchange schemes to reduce the rate of spread of the AIDS virus among injecting drug misusers.

Mr. Newton: This subject is addressed, among others, in the report from the advisory council on the misuse of drugs to which the Government responded on 29 March at columns 452-54. In addition, we have received eight letters about needle exchange schemes since the start of 1988.

Single Payments

63. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the number of claims for single payments outstanding at his Department's offices in Scotland on 11 April, broken down by region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The boundaries of the Department's local office areas and the Scottish regions are not conterminous. The numbers of claims for single payments outstanding at close of business on 8 April 1988 in each of the Department's offices in Scotland which handles supplementary benefit claims are as follows. (The figures are provisional and subject to revision).

Those offices having the largest numbers of single payment claims outstanding are generally in areas where take-up campaigns have been organised by local and regional councils. In response, central management in Scotland has deployed teams of experienced officers in those offices which have been most heavily affected. Claims have been sifted in order to identify those which are most urgent and these have been given priority. In addition consideration is being given to the possibility of additional overtime working to clear the backlog. At the current rate of progress it is hoped that the bulk of the outstanding claims will have been cleared by the end of June.

Maternity Services

64. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had with the professional bodies representing anaesthetists and obstetricians about providing flying squad emergency services for small, outlying obstetric units.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 8 March 1988 at columns 168-69.

Pensioners (Benefits)

65. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what recent discussions he has had with pensioners' organisations concerning the changes in the social security benefit system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The social security benefit reforms were among the matters discussed when I accompanied my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister when she met a delegation from the national pensioners' convention on 10 March. The reforms were also discussed when I met a delegation from the National Federation of Retirement Pensions Associations (Pensioners' Voice) on 9 May.

Aerosols

66. Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any plans to ban the use of aerosols in his Department's buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: Whilst we have no plans to place a ban on the use of aerosols in the Department's buildings, we support action which is in hand internationally to limit the use of chlorofluorocarbon propellants and to adopt the most suitable alternatives. In the meantime, the Department will continue to observe hazard warnings on, for example, flammable products and to use appropriate chemical products safely and cost effectively.

Departmental Expenditure

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much his Department allocated to or spent in 1985, 1986 and 1987 in the North West health region, the Northern health region and the Yorkshire health region, respectively.

Mr. Newton: Following is expenditure information for the Northern, Yorkshire and North Western health regions:

Total expenditure on hospital and community health services[1]

	1984-85 £ million	1985-86 £ million	1986-87 £ million
Northern region	634·7	669·6	717·4
Yorkshire region	709·2	772·3	818·1
North Western region	899·3	943·5	988·0

[1] Includes revenue and capital expenditure on hospital, community health, ambulance, blood transfusion and other services.

Source:

Annual accounts of the regional health authority and district health authorities comprising each region.

Notes:

1. Expenditure on family practitioner services is excluded: such expenditure is accounted for by family practitioner committees (FPCs) and cannot strictly be attributed to particular regions. However, prior to 1 April 1985 many of the district health authorities within each region had an associated FPC and those authorities' total expenditure figures for 1984-85 include elements relating to FPCs' administrative expenses which are not separately identifiable.
2. Expenditure by the special health authorities and other bodies providing central services to the National Health Service and expenditure met centrally by the Department is also excluded.

OPCS (Library)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys library has been closed to the public; if alternative sources of like information are available to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' library was closed to the public in January 1988 because of unexpected staff losses. These losses occurred just as a management review of all library services was scheduled to begin and it was considered unwise to replace the staff until this review was finished. The review has now reported, with several recommendations to improve the cost-effectiveness of the library service. However it also found that continued closure of the library would deprive the public of an extensive and valued source of information and would achieve savings only at the cost of generating additional work elsewhere in OPCS. Accordingly the library will re-open to the public on 1 June 1988, although an appointments system will be introduced and there will be limits on the number of appointments each day. A press notice giving details of the new arrangements will be issued shortly.

Departmental Television Advertising

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the total annual expenditure by his Department on television advertising campaigns, approved for broadcast by the IBA for each year since 1979 to the current financial year.

Mr. Portillo: The total annual expenditure by the Department on television advertising for each year since 1979 to the current financial year was:

1979-80	169,000
1980-81	180,000
1981-82	294,000
1982-83	774,000
1983-84	976,000
1984-85	Nil
1985-86	832,000
[1]1986-87	2,345,000
[1]1987-88	7,968,000

[1] The increased expenditure in 1986-87 and 1987-88 is largely accounted for by the Aids television campaign.

All advertisements were approved for broadcast by the independent broadcasting authorities.

Income Support (Disabled Pensioners)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria were used to determine the different rates of income support for a pensioner disabled before the age of 60 and a pensioner disabled after the age of 60.

Mr. Scott: A person disabled before the age of 60 gets the disability premium of £13·05 (single) or £18·60 (couple) if he or his partner is blind, has an invalid carriage, is receiving a long-term incapacity or disablement benefit, or has been incapable of work for 28 weeks.

A person disabled after the age of 60 may qualify for the higher pensioner premium. This is paid at the same rate and on the same terms as the disability premium except that the 28-week rule of incapacity for work does not apply to people aged 60 or more. A person who qualifies for the disability premium immediately before reaching the age of 60 will get the higher pensioner premium on reaching that age. The difference in the qualifying conditions reflects the fact that some degree of disability is likely to occur as people get older. This is catered for in the pension premiums of £10·65 (single) and £16·25 (couple).

The severe disability premium is payable to people under and over the age of 60 on exactly the same conditions.

The details of this premium structure will be looked at in the light of the OPCS survey on disabilities.

Green Giros (Encashment)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is provided to claimants about the criteria for encashment of green giros at Crown post offices.

Mr. Portillo: Guidance on the encashment of green giros is given on the reverse of the giro and on posters displayed in Post Offices. The Post Office clerk must be satisfied in each case that the conditions for payment have been met.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received on the workings of the new social security legislation which came fully into force in April.

Mr. Scott: Many.

Clinical Judgments (Complaints)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what consideration he has given to introducing legislation to grant a discretion to the Health Service Commissioner to investigate complaints involving clinical judgment, if he thinks fit; what is his latest assessment of the factors which (a) favour and (b) do not favour such a proposal; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: This issue was thoroughly aired in the House during the passage of the Parliamentary and Health Commissioners Act 1987. The Government concluded at that time that the procedures introduced in 1981, (with the commendation of the Select Committee on the Parliamentary Commissioner for Administration) were working reasonably well and did not seek to extend the Health Service Commissioner's power in this respect. No new factors have emerged since that decision was taken.

Supplementary Benefit Claimants (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to his reply of 12 April, Official Report, columns 115-6, if he will supply numbers for each major client group in the statistics for those claiming supplementary benefit in 1979 and in 1987 for the David Lane and Shakespeare street offices of his Department.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Office	Supplementary benefits claimants under pension age		Supplementary benefits claimants over pension age	Total
	Required to register for employment	Not required to register for employment
Date of Count: 27 November 1979
David Lane	1,530	1,981	3,163	6,674

Shakespeare Street	5,265	5,009	5,146	15,420

Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action.

Doctors (Contracts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make it his policy to examine honorary contracts for doctors in the course of the National Health Service review.

Mr. Moore: Our review is wide-ranging and we have received many proposals for reform. We shall consider these carefully before reaching conclusions.

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many doctors have applied to have their contracts varied from whole-time to less than whole-time in recent years.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

NHS Pay

Mr. Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a further statement on the progress towards a settlement of the current pay round for theatre operating staff and all other outstanding groups within the National Health Service.

Mr. Newton: The recommendations of the pay review bodies, which have already been accepted by the Government, affect the pay of some operating theatre staff. The pay of other theatre staff, as well as that of the remaining non pay review body staff groups, is a matter for the Whitley councils.

Abortions

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total number of abortions, under the terms of the Abortion Act 1967, in the West Cumbria district health authority area for each of the last seven years for which figures are available; how many of these abortions were performed on ground 4 where there is a substantial risk that if the child were born it would suffer from such physical or mental abnormalities as to be seriously handicapped; and how many of these abortions were performed on ground 5 to save the life of the pregnant woman.

Mr. Newton: The information requested is given in the table.

Notifications of abortions carried out under the Abortion Act 1967 to usual residents of West Cumbria health areas, by selected grounds—1980 to 1986

Complementary Medicine

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received seeking funding for the administrative costs of running research bodies engaged in stimulating research into complementary medicine; whether his Department intends to fund such expenses; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: One such body, the Research Council for Complementary Medicine, has approached the Department for a contribution towards its administrative costs. My noble Friend and officials are currently in correspondence with them about their application.

Doctors (Medical Protection)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the salary of junior and senior doctors includes an element for subscriptions to professional medical defence bodies; and whether membership of a medical protection body is obligatory.

Mr. Newton: Membership of a professional defence organisation is, other than in exceptional circumstances, a contractual requirement for hospital doctors. Their salaries are determined on the advice of the independent Review Body on Doctors' and Dentists' Remuneration. In its 1987 report, the review body took account of the cost of subscriptions in making its recommendations. This year, the review body has recommended, and the Government have accepted, that in most cases a proportion of these costs should be directly reimbursed to practitioners.

Radiation (Report)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the report from the committee on medical aspects of radiation in the environment looking into allegations of higher than normal incidences of leukaemia and lymphatic cancer among young children living near AWRE Aldermaston and AWRE Burghfield.

Mrs. Currie: The report is expected later this year.

Lewisham

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the staffing levels designated by his Department for each of the offices serving the London borough of Lewisham for the years 1987-88 and 1988-89, respectively; and how many staff were in post at 1 May in each of the offices.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Office	Complement 1987-88	Provisional Complement 1988-89	Staff in Post 1 May 1988
Bromley ILO	131	115	121·5
Crystal Palace ILO	156	135	152·5
Eltham AO	34	25	30·5
Eltham NIO	29	27	29

Lewisham ILO	200	167	205
Peckham ILO	167	148	165·5
Woolwich ILO	277	247	254·5

Notes:
ILO = Integrated Local Office.
AO = Area Office.
NIO = National Insurance Office.

The figures for 1988-89 are provisional as final staff complements for some local offices have not yet been allocated.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in what circumstances invalid care allowance is deducted from other benefits a carer is eligible to receive.

Mr. Scott: Where a carer is entitled to invalid care allowance and, simultaneously, a personal income maintenance benefit, the maximum amount payable is the rate of the higher benefit. This applies where the carer is also entitled to any of the following benefits:—

sickness benefit maternity allowance unemployment benefit invalidity benefit severe disablement allowance widow's benefit retirement pension

Maternity Payments

Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the last review of criteria for maternity payments was undertaken; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: These payments were included in the Government's reviews of social security in 1985. The current provisions were enacted in the Social Security Act 1986 and came into operation in April 1987.

Unemployment Benefits

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the Social Security Advisory Committee completed its review and reported on the additional condition for seasonal workers claiming unemployment benefit; and how he intends to respond.

Mr. Portillo: The committee's report has been received and the report and the Government's response are contained in a Command Paper presented to Parliament today — "The Additional Condition for Seasonal Workers Claiming Unemployment Benefit." C. 374.

SCOTLAND

National Health Service

67. Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given in his review of the National Health Service to the functioning of the Health Service in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Government's review of the National Health Service will take fully into account the circumstances of the Health Service in Scotland.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what will be the obligations of members of the armed forces who live away from home on military service, under poll tax regulations;

(2) what will be the obligations of merchant seamen who spend a majority of the year in foreign waters, under poll tax regulations.

Mr. Lang: All adults who are aged 18 or over and who have their sole or main residence in a local authority's area will be liable to pay the personal community charge. The question of whether a person is solely or mainly resident in the area of a local authority will be a matter of fact in relation to the particular circumstances of each case.

My right hon. and learned Friend is considering, in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence, the detailed application of the community charge proposals to members of the armed forces.

Ski Areas

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to improve uplift facilities within the Scottish ski areas; and if he will make a statment.

Mr. Lang: It is for the private sector to initiate proposals for new ski development in Scotland. The Government are willing to assist, through their development agencies, schemes that are financially viable and consistent with planning guidelines.

Gaelic Language

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his Department's policy on the role of television in the safeguarding and promotion of the Gaelic language.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We recognise the contribution which the media in general, and television in particular, can make to the preservation of the Gaelic language. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has no direct locus in this matter but we have encouraged the Gaelic community and its representative organisations to discuss its needs with the broadcasting authorities. It is, however, for the broadcasting authorities to assess the demand and to provide the appropriate services within available resources.

Nurses' Pay

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list for each health board the increase in expenditure required for 1988-89 due to the nurses' pay award and the extra money being made available by his Department for this increase.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The sum of £92 million is being made available in Scotland to finance the full additional costs of the review body pay recommendations. Boards will be informed of their additional allocations shortly.

Job Creation

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to improve employment prospects in Glasgow, Maryhill; and how many registered unemployed people there were there in March 1984 and March 1988.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The Government can best improve the employment prospects of Glasgow, Maryhill, and of Scotland as a whole, by the creation of a healthy and vigorous economy. That is precisely what the Government are doing.

In March 1984 there were 7,443 unemployed claimants in the Glasgow, Maryhill parliamentary constituency. The corresponding figure in March 1988 was 7,300.

"The Scotsman"

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on what measures he or the Lord Advocate intend to take against The Scotsman newspaper for the publication of leaked documents on 22 April from the submarine base at Holy Loch.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 6 May 1988]: Upon the basis of the information presently available neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor my noble and learned Friend intends to make any such statement.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Milk Quotas

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, when the United Kingdom comes within milk quota, the co-responsibility levy on milk will be abolished.

Mr. Donald Thompson: It is for the Council of Ministers to decide on the continuation of the co-responsibility levy. As part of its price-fixing package the Commission has proposed that it should be continued. In view of the continuing high cost of the milk regime, I support this proposal.

Lupins

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will make a statement setting out the financial and other incentives provided by the EEC for the growing of lupins; what is the purpose of such expenditure; and what is the current annual expenditure on this activity;

(2) what surplus now exists in the production of lupins in the EEC; and what is the current annual expenditure of disposing of such a surplus;

(3) what information he has on lupin production in the EEC; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Aid is payable to animal feed compounders utilising Community-grown sweet lupins, which have a high protein content, provided a specified minimum price has been paid to the grower. There is no surplus, because the Community is a substantial net importer of protein products. The cost to the Community budget of aid to sweet lupins was about 0·5 MECU (or £350,000) in 1987, and an estimated 6,000 tonnes will be eligible for aid in 1987-88.

Farmers (Cumbria)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications for review he has received from farmers in Cumbria claiming to have suffered losses as a result of the Chernobyl disaster but who had not been compensated under the Government's scheme; if he will give the date range when these applications were made; if each such application was considered individually; on what date a decision was taken on them; how many of these applications he has rejected; and if he will make a statement on the general pattern of the defects in the applications which led to their rejection.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 9 May 1988]: When the Chernobyl sheep compensation scheme was first introduced, we and the farmers unions concluded that it would be cumbersome and slow to try to cost the effect of the restrictions on each individual enterprise. We decided instead to set qualifying criteria which were designed, in close consultation with the NFU, to target compensation on those who needed it in line with a formula which enabled rapid calculation. The element of rough justice that would be involved was accepted by the farmers unions as inevitable in the interests of getting money to affected producers as quickly as possible and on the basis of clear criteria for their claims.

In December 1986 the NFU claimed that a small minority of restricted producers had suffered losses that year which were not covered by the compensation arrangements which we had introduced. My Ministry had exhaustive discussions throughout 1987 with the NFU to examine the issues involved. However, those discussions failed to find a sound basis for avoiding the rough justice which had been anticipated.

On 5 January 1988 the Cumbria branch of the NFU wrote to the Ministry's Carlisle office reporting that it had completed a survey of the local producers affected by the restrictions, identifying some cases of alleged inadequate compensation. On 28 January the survey forms which the NFU had devised and sent to producers were supplied to us. These covered 66 farmers. Only nine have received no compensation at all: 57 have already received some compensation (totalling at present over £80,000) under one or more of the four legs of the compensation arrangements we have introduced.

The cases identified by the Cumbria branch of the NFU represent some 4 per cent. of the 1,600 Cumbrian producers who fell under restriction. Their claim is that the Government should pay amounts which each producer has identified as arising in respect of his own holding totalling £177,000. Thus, they are seeking in effect individual assessments which would take account of what would have happened in a "normal" year. Since the scheme does not provide for individual assessment in this way, such payments cannot be made.

The question of defects in the information in the forms provided by the individual farmers does not arise since there is no basis against which to assess it. Careful examination of the new information in the forms has again failed to establish a sound basis for identifying farmers whose cases might justify further consideration or for making changes to the scheme. My right hon. Friend wrote to the president of the NFU explaining this on the 23 March 1988 and, at his request, the divisional office wrote to the Cumbria NFU in similar terms.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety at Work

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many prosecutions were made under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 as a result of investigations undertaken within West Yorkshire by the Health and Safety Executive for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The table shows the available information.

Number of prosecutions[1] in West Yorkshire[2]: Information laid by factory and agricultural inspectors and by inspectors from local authorities

Year	Number
1981	110
1982	81
1983	114
1984	120
[3]1986-87	168

[1] Also includes cases taken under other associated regulations and Acts.
[2] County of West Yorkshire comprising Bradford, Calderdale, Kirkless, Leeds and Wakefield.
[3] Provisional data for the 12 month period April 1986 to March 1987.

Factory Inspectorate

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many factory inspectors were employed by the Health and Safety Executive in West Yorkshire for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: Figures for West Yorkshire are not available. The number of factory inspectors in West and North Yorkshire is as follows:

April	Inspectors
1981	35
1982	29
1983	31
1984	29
1985	35

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits were made by factory inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive in West Yorkshire for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) cannot identify, without disproportionate cost, the number of visits made by factory inspectors in West Yorkshire exclusively. The table shows the total number of visits made by HSE's factory inspectors in West and North Yorkshire from 1985 to 1987:

Year (1 April-31 March)	Number of visits
1986-87	13,261
1987-88	10,731

There is no information available on the total number of visits before 1985.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many accidents and incidents were investigated by factory inspectors employed by the Health and Safety Executive in West Yorkshire for each year from 1980 to 1987.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available in the form requested. The Health and Safety Executive (HSE) cannot identify, without disproportionate cost, the number of accidents and incidents investigated by factory inspectors in West Yorkshire exclusively.

The table shows the total number of accidents and incidents investigated by HSE factory inspectors in West and North Yorkshire from 1980 to 1987.

Staff (Ethnic Origins)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many men and how many women, respectively, who are of Afro-Caribbean and of Asian origin, respectively, are employed at senior levels in his Department.

Mr. Lee: In common with the rest of the Civil Service, the Department of Employment group has carried out surveys of the ethnic origin of its staff. The surveys were undertaken on the basis of voluntary self-classification. Results for 1 April 1988 show that of a total of 3,654 staff at senior executive officer level and above, 3,246 (or 89 per cent.) responded. The table shows the number of those responding who classified themselves as Afro-Caribbean or Asian.

	Afro-Caribbean		Asian
	Male	Female	Male	Female
Senior Executive Officer (or equivalent) and above	7	0	10	1

Staff (Monitoring)

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has instituted an ethnic and a sex monitoring exercise, respectively, in his Department, in compliance with the code of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: I fully accept the need for employers to monitor the sex and ethnic origin of both their work force and job applicants, and the Department of Employment group has taken a firm lead in this respect.

The Department has been monitoring the effectiveness of its equal opportunity policies for women since 1 July 1985. Monitoring covers all the areas of personnel practice which the Equal Opportunities Commission's code of practice suggests should be monitored.

In common with other departments, the Department of Employment group has carried out a programme of surveys to find out the ethnic origin of staff. This was completed early in 1987. With a database thus established, the Department has begun monitoring recruitment and access to training as well as the ethnic composition of its staff, and is now considering how to extend ethnic monitoring to other areas of personnel practice such as promotion.

Departmental Employment Practices

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has taken positive action to remedy past inequalities in employment practices in his Department, in compliance with the codes of the Commission for Racial Equality and of the Equal Opportunities Commission, respectively.

Mr. Lee: The Department has taken several initiatives to encourage women and ethnic minorities into grades and areas of work in which they have been, or are, under-represented. Examples are positive encouragement to ethnic minorities to apply for jobs at levels where it is the Department's responsibility to recruit; for women to attend "women-only" management training courses run by the Civil Service College and the Department itself; and to both women and ethnic minority staff to enter and develop a career in computing within the department.

Disabled People

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he has taken concerning the Public Accounts Committee's findings in regard to the employment of people with disabilities, the distribution of employment rehabilitation centres and his Department's lack of reliable information on the numbers and locations of disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Government are considering the conclusions reached by the Public Accounts Committee. A response will be conveyed to the Public Accounts Committee in due course. The Government have announced already that the view expressed by the Public Accounts Committee will be among the matters taken into account in the internal review of services for people with disabilities set up by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State earlier in the year.

Restart Scheme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if all clients are informed about follow-up interviews at their first restart interview.

Mr. Lee: Based on a pilot exercise last year, follow-up interviews are now offered to clients where resources are available. The decision to inform clients is a matter for local management discretion.

Earnings

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what are the latest figures for average male earnings expressed as (a) mean average, (b) median and (c) mode;

(2) what are the latest figures for average female earnings, expressed as (a) mean average, (b) median and (c) mode.

Mr. Lee: The latest date for which information is available is April 1987. Table 30 in part B of the report on the new earnings survey 1987 gives information on the gross weekly mean and median earnings of full-time adult male and female employees in Great Britain. Information on the distribution of weekly earnings from which the modal ranges can be determined, is published in table 29 of part B. A copy of the report is available in the Library.

THE ARTS

Natural History Museum

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what were the costs of (a) staff, (b) equipment and maintenance, (c) temporary and other premises and accommodation, (d) training, (e) administration, (f) advertising and marketing, (g) value added tax and (h) other costs involved in introducing compulsory charges for admission to the Natural History museum in 1987-88;

(2) how many additional staff (a) were originally employed and (b) are in post now, at the Natural History museum to assist in administering admission charges.

Mr. Luce: The staffing and administration of the arrangements for the collection of admission charges at the British Museum (Natural History) are matters for the museum's trustees. I understand that the overall costs for 1987-88 were £158,000: 11 per cent. of the net income raised.

Arts Council Publications

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what information he has on the production cost of each Arts Council publication in the last five years, with reference to (a) staff time, (b) printing, (c) design and art work, (d) commissioned work and (e) other costs.

Mr. Luce: This information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Museums, Galleries and Libraries

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Minister for the Arts what steps have been taken to provide a basis for settling the grading and pay of the directors heading national and other major museums, galleries and libraries.

Mr. Luce: A review of these posts was undertaken by Mr. Gordon Burrett CB (retired civil servant), Professor Brian Morris (chairman of the Museums and Galleries Commission), and a senior Treasury staff inspector. I, and other sponsoring Ministers, are grateful to the review team for their report, copies of which I am placing in the Libraries of both Houses.

The grading and pay of director posts is related to the corresponding Civil Service grades. The review team were asked to recommend appropriate grade levels, taking account of these relationships. They concluded that although there were drawbacks in the present system of using Civil Service grade analogues, the balance of advantage still lay decisively with retaining it, though it should be reviewed again before long. The Government agree with this view.

The Government have carefully considered the review team's recommendations, and have accepted them where the majority of posts are concerned. In particular, in the middle range, however, it has been decided to substitute a broader-banded approach, not involving the creation of a special new grade between grades 3 and 4, for the relatively finer tuning proposed by the team. The table sets out the posts concerned, the present gradings, those proposed by the review team and those which have now been approved by the Government and will be introduced with effect from 1 April 1988.

The review team also recommended that a system of merit awards should be introduced for the directors. There is much to be said for the enhanced motivation and the rewards for performance that such awards may provide. There are, however, a number of considerations to be taken into account in the introduction of any such arrangements for the national museums and galleries, and the Government will consider this proposal further before reaching a decision.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Married Man's Allowance

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many husbands (a) do not have sufficient earnings to make full use of their married man's allowance, and (b) make full use of this allowance.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I apologise for the delay in replying.

In 1988-89, about 2·9 million husbands are expected to have insufficient income of their own to use all their tax allowances. In about half a million of these couples, the wife is able to use the married man's tax allowance against her earnings.

About 11·3 million married couples are expected to be liable to income tax in 1988-89 and to use all the appropriate tax allowances.

Her Majesty's Stationery Office Publications

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many publications Her Majesty's Stationery Office published in each of the last eight years; and what were the total receipts in each year.

Mr. Brooke [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of new titles	Net receipts from sales (£ million)
1980-81	8,400	31·0
1981-82	8,900	39·4
1982-83	8,400	33·2
1983-84	7,800	30·7
1984-85	9,300	32·3
1985-86	9,200	36·3
1986-87	9,300	36·2
1987-88	8,300	36·4

Note: Net receipts are for all publications except those for which Her Majesty's Stationery Office acts as agent.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the reduction in capital gains tax receipts in the first full year of operation of independent taxation of capital gains for husband and wife and the reduction that would result were the transfer of assets between husband and wife to be chargeable occasions.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The full year cost in respect of capital gains realised in 1990-91 is £60 million. This cost may be partly offset by tax on gains deferred from earlier years to take advantage of the new arrangements for the taxation of husband and wife. I regret that information is not available on which to base an estimate for transfers between husband and wife.

DEFENCE

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments have been carried out by the Ministry of Defence in each of the last five years.

Mr. Sainsbury: The number of experiments subject to the Cruelty to Animals Act 1876, and the subsequent Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, for the last five years for which figures are available is as follows:

Year	Experiments
1982	14,400
1983	9,900
1984	11,000
1985	6,900
1986	6,600

Gnome Aero Engines

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Gnome aero engines have been repaired by Rolls-Royce under tender No. A24A since it commenced, and what is the difference between the tender price per engine and the invoiced price.

Mr. Sainsbury: The information requested is commercially confidential between the Ministry of Defence and the company concerned.

Ammunition Lorries

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether (a) his Department, (b) Gwent county council, (c) the Department of Transport, (d) the Welsh Office and (e) the local press were informed of the fire that took place on 30 January on a lorry loaded with ammunition in the Newport, West constituency.

Mr. Freeman: The fire was reported to the Ministry of Defence through the appropriate channels. However, the incident was a minor one and the ammunition load was at no time in any danger, so the other bodies were not informed.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all occasions in the past 10 years when lorries loaded with ammunition were involved in collisions or major mechanical breakdowns.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics on the number of vehicles loaded with ammunition in collisions or major mechanical breakdowns are not held centrally for years prior to 1982 and details could only be provided at disproportionate cost. The occasions since 1 January 1982 are as follows:

13 December 1982, 11 January 1983, 11 December 1983, 3 December 1984, 13 May 1985, 3 December 1986, 22 July 1986, 27 April 1988.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all the occasions in the past 10 years when lorries loaded with ammunition caught fire on motorways and other roads.

Mr. Freeman: Statistics on the number of vehicles loaded with ammunition which caught fire are not held centrally for years prior to 1982 and details could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The occasions since 1 January 1982 are as follows:

24 October 1984, 1 May 1986, 30 January 1988.

Commoners (Rights)

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 29 April, Official Report, columns 310-11, whether he will make it his policy to seek to suspend sine die the rights of common, instead of extinguishing them under the Defence Act 1854, with a view to their restoration once Greenham and Cookham Commons are no longer required for military use.

Mr. Freeman: The option was carefully considered before the decision to extinguish the commoner's rights was announced. Since the lapse of the wartime defence regulations in 1958 the Ministry of Defence has had no legal powers to suspend commoners' rights. However, I am considering whether these rights, once extinguished, could be restored, in the event that RAF Greenham Common is no longer required for defence purposes.

Low-level Flying

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) of 14 April, Official Report, column 237, what discussions the Chief of the Air Staff held with the Moroccan authorities on the possibility of the Royal Air Force making use of facilities in Morocco for low-flying training; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 May 1988]: I have nothing further to add to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces to the hon. Member for Warley, East (Mr. Faulds) on 14 April 1988, at column 237. The details of discussions of this sort are confidential.

Chemical Weapons

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those nations and organisations which have employed chemical weapons in the past 10 years; and which international statutes they have been adjudged to have violated.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

There have been a large number of reports of the use of chemical weapons over the last 10 years, although many have not been confirmed. Iraqi forces have repeatedly used chemical weapons against Iranian forces in the Gulf conflict. There has also been evidence of the use of chemical weapons in Afghanistan and south-east Asia in the early 1980s, although independent on-site investigation did not prove possible.

The use of chemical weapons in war is prohibited by the 1925 Geneva protocol, to which approximately 110 states are currently party. About a third of these states have reserved the right to retaliate against first use.

Main allegations on CBW use 1977-1988

Laotian and Vietnamese forces in Laos	1977-1981
Vietnamese forces in Kanpuchea	1978-1984, 1986 and 1987
United States covert action (CIA) in Cuba	1978-1981
Vietnamese and Chinese forces during Chinese invasion	February 1979
Soviet forces in Afghanistan	1980-84 (and 1986)
Ethiopian forces against Eritrean sessionists and in the conflict with Somalia	Summer 1980-April 1981 (and continuing)
Iraqi forces in Iran	November 1980-1988

Mozambique forces against RENAMO rebels	December 1986
Sudan	December 1986
Filipino terrorists against Government forces	September 1987

Note:

Most of these allegations are unsubstantiated and/or are made by less than partial observers; for instance, outside Governments supporting one of the combatants. Several of these allegations have been repeated over the last decade and each separate report is not reproduced here.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Debating Time

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much debating time has been made available for Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish matters since July 1987; and if he will list the legislation which has been considered on the Floor of the House and in Standing Committee for each of the regions.

Mr. Wakeham: The information requested for legislation relating exclusively to Scottish, Welsh and Northern Irish matters is as follows:

Debating time since July 1987

	Floor of the House	Standing Committee

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names and areas of land for which instalments of forestry grant aid have been paid in Sutherland and Caithness since 1 April 1981.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will instruct the Forestry Commission to publish details in future in its annual report of (a) the area of land approved for forestry grant aid and (b) the area of planting for which grants were paid for (i) conifers, (ii) mixed woodlands and (iii) pure broadleaves in each of the Forestry Commission's conservancies in that year.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I shall ask the forestry commissioners to consider whether more detailed information on private planting might reasonably be provided in their annual reports.

Housing

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what plans he has to review existing tolerable standard laws for housing;

(2) whether he intends making severe condensation in a house a reason for declaring a house unfit for habitation;

(3) whether he intends to make lack of bath or shower a condition for a house being regarded as substandard.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: We are currently reviewing the statutory tolerable standard for houses in the context of our proposed reform of the home improvement and repair grants system, as outlined in the White Paper "Housing: The Government's Proposals for Scotland," published last November. We expect to issue a detailed consultation paper on our reform proposals shortly for comment.

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Rifkind: No valid applications have been received from the general public under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 and consequently no revenue has been received by the Scottish Office.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Rifkind: Eighteen valid applications have been received under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984; all have been from staff within the Scottish Office.

Chronically Sick Young People

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total number of residential places available in each health board area for the young chronically sick.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information is not held centrally in precisely the form requested. Information about beds available for young chronic sick people in NHS hospitals in each health board in Scotland is contained in table 3 of "Scottish Hospital Activity Statistics" published by the information and statistics division, Scottish Health Service Common Services Agency. Residential places for physically disabled people are also provided in residential homes registered by local authority social work departments. Information about these can be found in the "Statistical Bulletin: Residential Accommodation," published by the Scottish Education Department, social work services group. Further relevant information is contained in the annual report presented under the provisions of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. All of these documents are available in the Library.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the most recent estimate of the number of young chronically sick in each health board area.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centrally.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if any further items have been accepted in lieu of tax in the current financial year.

Mr. Rifkind: I am pleased to announce that the following item has been accepted in lieu of tax:

Item	Amount of Tax Satisfied £
The portrait of John Gray of Carntyne by Sir Henry Raeburn	96,250

The portrait has been allocated to Aberdeen art gallery and museum in accordance with the conditions upon which it was offered.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the average rate paid by a domestic ratepayer in each Scottish local authority in 1988-89, together with his estimate for the community charge which would be payable by each payer in 1988-89 had the community charge system been in operation.

Mr. Lang: The table shows present estimates of the average rate bill paid by a domestic ratepayer and the estimated level of community charge which would be necessary to replace domestic rate income in 1988-89. Neither set of figures reflects the rate reduction of 5·6p proposed for Lothian regional council. The community charge figures are those that would be required to raise the same revenue for each authority in domestic rates in the current year. They do not represent forecasts of the level of charge when the new system is introduced in 1989-90.

ENERGY

Nuclear Reactors (Fuel Consumption)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the quantity in tonnes of fresh fuel consumed per year by (a) a 500 MW Magnox reactor, (b) a 1300 MW advanced gas-cooled reactor, and (c) an 1100 MW pressurised water reactor.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Uranium

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the quantity in tonnes of depleted uranium produced from the Magnox reprocessing operation at Sellafield which has been re-enriched and used as nuclear fuel since its inception.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Over 15,000 tonnes of depleted uranium from the reprocessing of Magnox irradiated fuel have been enriched for use in civil nuclear fuel.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy-efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My Department has no plans to invest in new energy-efficient measures in our main building, where we are the principal tenants, as we will be vacating the premises in the summer of 1989. My Department, though, has set a target reduction in electricity consumption within its control, for 1988-89, of 7 per cent. Electricity used for lighting cannot be identified separately from overall electricity consumption.

Plutonium

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central of 24 February, Official Report, column 240, if he will list the bodies and agencies for which Ministers are responsible which are to be involved directly or indirectly, in the physical protection of plutonium transported from Sellafield to Japan.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The police and other agencies will be involved as necessary.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what demand British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. expects for plutonium for the manufacture of fresh fuel for electricity generation in Japanese reactors from the mid 1990s.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for BNFL and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what factors are taken into account apart from physical protection in assessing alternative forms of transport for exporting plutonium overseas.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Safety and physical protection are the two most important factors in assessing alternative forms of transport for exporting any nuclear material overseas. The cost of transporting the material must also be taken into account.

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the countries which currently send spent Magnox fuel to Sellafield for reprocessing; how much plutonium has been returned to these countries; and how it was transported.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Japan and Italy currently send spent magnox fuel to Sellafield for reprocessing. Some 2½ tonnes of plutonium from the reprocessing of such fuel has been returned to either the country of origin or, on the instructions of its owner, to a third country. The plutonium was transported by air or by sea in accordance with IAEA safety regulations.

Information relating to specific consignments is confidential for reasons of security and commercial sensitivity.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether plutonium production ability was a factor in the choice of design for the advanced gas-cooled reactors at Hinkley Point in Somerset.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The choice of individual reactor design is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Thermal Oxide Fuel

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the countries currently under contract to send spent thermal oxide fuel to Sellafield for reprocessing in the mid-1990s.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The countries which have thermal oxide reprocessing contracts with British Nuclear Fuels plc which still have to send fuel to Sellafield for reprocessing in the new thermal oxide reprocessing plant are the Netherlands, the Federal Republic of Germany, Switzerland, Italy and Japan. BNFL also has fuel for reprocessing from Canada, Sweden and Spain which has already been delivered.

Air-sea Combat Manoeuvring System

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on his assessment of the likely effects on North sea gas and oil installation manufacturing in (a) East Anglia and (b) the United Kingdom generally, of the air-sea combat manoeuvring system.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I understand that British Aerospace is considering a project which would involve the fabrication of six small towers. United Kingdom fabrication yards should be in a strong position to compete for the work if the project goes ahead.

Power Stations (Comparative Costs)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish his Department's calculations of the relative costs of a coal-fired station in relation to Sizewell B, referred to in his decision letter of 12 March 1987 on the Central Electricity Generating Board's application to construct Sizewell B; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have nothing to add to the letter issued by my right hon. Friend on 12 March 1987, which adequately states the grounds for his decision to give consent to the power station at Sizewell B.

AGRs (Refuelling Shutdowns)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions on average advanced gas-cooled reactors have to be shut down each year for refuelling; and if he will estimate the cost of these shutdowns.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Electricity Generation

38. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what minimum proportion of the minimum non-fossil fuel generated electricity in the privately owned electricity industry structure he proposes for England and Wales he envisages will be generated from nuclear stations.

Mr. Parkinson [pursuant to his reply, 28 March 1988, c. 295-96.]: As the White Paper on privatising electricity (Cm. 322) made clear, the Government have decided that the obligation will be expressed in terms of a requirement for the distribution companies to contract for a specified minimum proportion of non-fossil fuelled capacity. This will ensure that both nuclear capacity and renewable sources of power will be able to make a contribution to maintaining diversity of fuel sources in the electricity supply system. The distribution companies will be able to seek such capacity from any source, including own generation (within any general limits on this that may be laid down), providing any necessary safety, planning and other consents are obtained. The obligation will set a minimum level of non-fossil fuelled capacity; there will be nothing to prevent distribution companies contracting for or generating companies building a higher level of plant.

It is intended that the requirement will be embodied in an order in the form of a statutory instrument made by the Secretary of State under powers to be sought in the main privatisation legislation. What follows is therefore subject to Parliament approving that legislation.

The Government believe that, in order to give an effective and clear statement of strategic priorities, and to set the background for the series of power station applications submitted and intended to be submitted by the Central Electricity Generating Board (the benefit of which will be transferred to the CEGB's successor companies), it would be right to set the obligation as a level to be obtained in the future. The White Paper made it clear that the proportion of non-fossil fuelled generating capacity required to be under contract would be fixed at a level achievable at the time of privatisation. The precise level is still under consideration. However the Governent's present intention is that, when it is set, the figure for the year 2000 will not be below the present level of existing and committed nuclear and renewable generating capacity.

WALES

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Peter Walker: None.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Peter Walker: One.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Energy Saving

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy-efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Hurd: My Department has set a target reduction of 0·45 per cent. in energy usage for 1988-89. Investment in energy efficiency measures, including wherever possible the introduction of more energy-efficient lighting equipment, is planned to amount to £690,000, of which investment in energy-efficient lighting equipment accounts or £10,000 supplemented by general maintenance expenditure. Because of the wide range of operational requirements and types of building occupied by the Department it is not practicable to specify targets for particular forms of electricity usage such as lighting.

Political Parties (Annual Accounts)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to oblige political parties to file and publish annual accounts.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Nationality Application

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the minimum and what is the maximum fee currently required to be remitted by an applicant for British nationality; and where he deposits such fees between the time they are removed from the applicants' envelopes and the time that the applicants are informed as to the result of their applications.

Mr. Renton: The prescribed fees for British citizenship are as set out. On receipt of each application, the fee is taken as an appropriation in aid into class XI, vote 3, and is accounted for in the appropriation account for that vote.

Naturalisation	170
except for the spouse of a British citizen for which the fee is	60
Registration of an adult	60
Registration of a minor	60
except for registration under the provisions of section 9 of the British Nationality Act 1981 for which the fee is	10

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what revenue has been received by the Metropolitan police, since 11 November 1987, from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that to 5 May 1988 the force had received £1,490 in fees for access to personal records under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Renton: During the period 11 November 1987 to 6 May 1988 the Department received £127·50 in fees for subject access to personal records under the provisons of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by the Metropolitan police have been received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis has provided the following information:

Subject access applications: 11 November 1987 to 5 May 1988
Metropolitan police

	Number
Applications for data held solely on Metropolitan police computers	11
Applications for data held on Metropolitan police computers and on the police national computer	58
Applications for data held solely on the police national computer	52
Total applications for subject access	121

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Renton: During the period 11 November 1987 to 6 May 1988 the Department received 21 requests for subject access.

Police National Computer

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements are being made by his Department or other Government agencies to provide cost-effective communications systems for police national computer U2.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Department is considering a number of options for the provision of a cost-effective communications system for the replacement police national computer.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements will be made for tendering for civil works contracts associated with police national computer U2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All contracts for civil works at the PNC site at Hendon, associated with the replacement police national computer system, will be let by the Metropolitan police (which is responsible for providing services to that site) under its normal tendering procedure.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what stage has been reached for specifications for data processing equipment for police national computer U2.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The operational requirement for the replacement police national computer was issued to potential suppliers on 3 May 1988. A copy has been placed in the Library.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are currently employed full or part-time on planning or development work for police national computer U2.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As at 9 May 1988, 48 staff (42 civil servants and six seconded police officers) were employed full-time, and one civil servant was employed part-time, on planning and development work for the replacement police national computer.

Children's Homes

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average time taken for the Metropolitan police to record examinations of applicants to work in children's homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that at present it is taking on average 47 days to deal with inquiries from local authorities about applicants for posts which involve substantial access to children. Separate figures are not available for inquiries about applicants for posts in children's homes run by local authorities.

Births (Holloway Prison)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many babies have been born in Her Majesty's prison, Holloway in each year since 1979 and in local hospitals to prisoners in Holloway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available details are as follows:

Period	Number of babies born: in Holloway	in hospital[2]
1979	1	18
1980	—	20

Passports

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make inquiries into the reasons why Mr. Emrys Frederick Williams of 154 Maplin Way, Thorpe Bay, Southend-on-Sea, Essex, who sent his passport for renewal to the passport office, Peterborough, on 16 March, to enable him to attend his daughter's wedding in the United States of America, has not yet received his passport, although the Department acknowledged the receipt of his application on 23 March (Number 7); and when he expects the passport office to be able to deal with passport applications more expeditiously.

Mr. Renton: A replacement passport was posted on 9 May. Applications showing an early date of travel are given priority at the passport offices. As Mr. Williams had indicated that he did not intend to travel until 5 July, his application was not regarded as urgent.

I announced on 31 March, at columns 680-81, in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Skipton and Ripon (Mr. Curry), a number of special measures to reduce delays at the passport offices in advance of computerisation of the passport-issuing system.

Crime (Clear-up Rates)

Mr. John: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list, for each police force in England and Wales, the clear-up rate, at the latest convenient date, of the following crimes: (a) murder and manslaughter, (b) offences against the person, (c) arson, (d) robbery, burglary and theft, (e) offences against property, including wilful and malicious damage; and if he will set out the corresponding rates for the same date five years previously.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The number of notifiable offences cleared up by the police in 1987 was 1·23 million, 9 per cent. higher than in 1982. Clear-up rates for the largest major groups of offences are listed in the following tables. More detailed analyses of offences recorded and cleared up by type of offence are generally published by chief officers of police in their annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library. For some types of offences such as homicide and arson, the annual numbers recorded and cleared up by some forces are small and subject to appreciable fluctuations, so that clear-up rates based on these numbers may be misleading.

Petty Sessional Divisions

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons with the appropriate qualifications were employed by each petty sessional division in England and Wales at 31 December 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 and the latest date available;

(2) what was the establishment figure for persons with appropriate qualifications for each petty sessional division in England and Wales at 31 December 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 and the latest date available;

(3) how many ancillary persons were employed in each of the petty sessional divisions of England and Wales at 31 December 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 and the latest date available;

(4) what was the establishment figures for ancillary persons employed by each petty sessional division of England and Wales at 31 December 1984, 1985, 1986 and 1987 and the latest date available.

Mr. John Patten [holding answer 21 April 1988]: I have today written to the hon. Member, and a copy of the reply has been placed in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what revenue has been received by the Cabinet Office since 11 November 1987 for the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984;

(2) how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by the Cabinet Office have been received since 11 November 1987.

The Prime Minister: Twenty-two subject access requests have been received. All but one were from staff who are not charged a fee. The Cabinet Office has received £10 in revenue.

VAT

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she has advised the European Council of Her Majesty's Government's objection to the levying of value added tax on food, fuel, and children's clothing; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has made our position perfectly clear to the Economic and Finance Council (ECOFIN) which is the appropriate forum for discussion of the European Commission's proposals for tax approximation.

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister, further to her answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 3 May, Official Report, column 350, whether the Hospitals for Sick Children special health authority ever asked the Government to meet the full costs of the refurbishment of Great Ormond street hospital for sick children.

The Prime Minister: The Hospitals for Sick Children special health authority has made no formal proposal for the Government to meet the full cost of its rebuilding programme. The authority has always accepted that the Government would not fully fund this scheme.

Visits

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister (1) why she did not inform right hon. and hon. Members representing central London constituencies that she proposed to cease the practice of informing them of her intentions to visit their constituencies;

(2) why she informs right hon. and hon. Members representing constituencies outside central London of her intentions to visit their constituencies;

(3) how many times, since she decided not to inform right hon. and hon. Members representing central London constituencies of visits to their constituencies, she has visited Holborn and St. Pancras;

(4) when she ceased to make it her practice to inform right hon. and hon. Members representing seats in central London of her intentions to visit their constituency;

(5) which constituencies are covered by her decision not to inform right hon. and hon. Members representing central London constituencies of her intentions to visit their constituency;

(6) why she has decided not to inform right hon. and hon. Members representing central London constituencies of her intentions to visit their constituency.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my replies of 3 May 1988, at column 350. My usual practice has always been to inform any Members of a visit to his or her constituency shortly before the visit is due to take place, as a courtesy to the hon. Member concerned. It would be impractical to do so, however, in relation to central London because of the frequency of visits in that area which I undertake in the course of my duties. Records are not readily available of the visits I undertake to these central London constituencies, which for this purpose include the city of London and Westminster, South, Chelsea, Kensington, Westminster, North, Holborn and St. Pancras and Islington, South and Finsbury.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Zimbabwe

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment is available to him on the level of economic growth in Zimbabwe in each year since 1983.

Mr. Mellor: The rate of economic growth in Zimbabwe as measured by the estimated growth in the gross domestic product is as follows for each year since 1983:

Year	Per cent.
1984	2·6
1985	9·3
1986	2·3

Source: IMF staff papers.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his assessment of the extent to which Zimbabwe has benefited from joining the Lomé convention and improved access to European Community markets.

Mr. Mellor: Over the five years to 1990 Zimbabwe will get 73 million ecu (about £50 million) in planned aid from the European development fund, in addition to benefiting from SADCC and other regional projects. Zimbabwe also receives loans from the European Investment Bank and emergency aid, and is eligible for finance under the stabex scheme.

Under the Lomé convention, Zimbabwe's exports of its industrial products and the great majority of its agricultural products enter the Community free of tariff and other restrictions.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list current development projects in Zimbabwe for which United Kingdom national, Commonwealth or European Community assistance is given and the value of that assistance.

Mr. Mellor: Under the bilateral aid programme to Zimbabwe, Britain is currently financing the following projects at a total cost of £28·598 million:

Project	£ million
Land Resettlement Grant 1981	20·000
Project Loan 1982
Water Bowsers	0·475
Veterinary Faculty Equipment	0·740
Land Rover Rehabilitation	0·707
Cold Storage Commission Equipment	0·757
Kwekwe Roasting Plant	0·317
Migrant Pest Control	0·050
Tractor Rehabilitation Grant 1986	1·200
Rural Development Grant 1986
Lister Diesels Assembly	1·897
Lister Diesels Rehabilitation	0·385
Dairy Marketing Board	0·490
Nyanyadzi Irrigation	0·280
Cotton Marketing Board	1·300
	28·598

In addition, we expect to spend about £6 million in 1988-89 on technical co-operation activities.

The Commonwealth fund for technical co-operation is currently funding with grants estimated at £67,800 a number of projects in Zimbabwe involving the provision of experts.

Projects in Zimbabwe currently being financed by the European Community from the fifth and sixth European development funds are as follows:

	Total allocation £ million
Grant funding
Veterinary faculty, University of Zimbabwe	5·17
Fruit and vegetable development programme	0·43
Matabeleland South Rural Water Project	0·76
Aid to Grain Marketing Board	0·96
Microprojects programmes III	2·07
Technical assistance to Zimbabwe Development Bank	0·34
Regional tsetse and trypanosomiasis control	5·76
Regional railways training	1·38
Agriculture Finance Corporation	2·41
Expert development programme	3·03
Konyati and Gatske-Gatske communal lands	2·07
Reintegration of qualified nationals	0·52
Special loan funding
Smallholder coffee, fruit, vegetable, irrigated food crop development	2·90
Tsetse and trypanosomiasis control	2·69
Matabeleland South Rural Water Project	2·07
Aid to Grain Marketing Board	3·88
Agricultural Finance Corporation	13·79
European Investment Bank risk capital
Zimbabwe Development Bank	3·10

The United Kingdom share of this total of £53·33 million is about £9 million.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list United Kingdom contributors to Zimbabwe through national, Commonwealth and European Community action in each year since 1983.

Mr. Mellor: United Kingdom bilateral aid expenditure and the estimated British share of Commonwealth and European Community aid expenditure to Zimbabwe since 1983 have been as follows:

	1983	1984	1985	1986
United Kingdom bilateral aid	19,453	15,062	23,636	12,242
Estimated United Kingdom share of European Community aid	1,590	4,470	700	600
Estimated United Kingdom share of Commonwealth aid	79	89	107	78

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what other measures he has taken, or proposes to take, to assist the Zimbabwe Government to strengthen their national economy and to decrease their dependence on the economy of the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Mellor: All our bilateral aid to Zimbabwe aims to strengthen the national economy. In addition, we support the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference, of which Zimbabwe is a member.

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what revenue has been received by the Overseas Development Adminstration since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Mellor: None. Members of the Overseas Development Administration's staff, overseas pensioners and staff employed under the aid programme are not charged for reasonable access to their personal records.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by the Overseas Development Administration he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Mellor: Four.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Rating Reform

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals to discuss the arrangements for the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: No. The arrangements for the introduction of the community charge are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment. I understand that officials of his Department will be meeting representatives of the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals in the near future.

City Technology Colleges

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements he intends to make regarding the qualifications and suitability of persons to be employed as teachers in city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: Teachers at city technology colleges will be employed by the charitable trust established to run the colleges, and appointed by the governing bodies and the principals acting on behalf of the governing bodies. My right hon. Friend will require, as a condition of grant, that CTCs will normally employ as teachers those who have qualified teacher status.

CTCs will be registered independent schools within the meaning of the Education Act 1944. As such they will fall within the scope of my right hon. Friend's powers under section 71 of that Act with regard to the suitability of persons employed as teachers. Like other schools, CTCs will also have access to my Department's information on those teachers who have been excluded from the profession, or restricted in their activities.

Schools (Healthy Eating)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many schools in the United Kingdom have taken part in schemes under the inner urban aid fund to promote healthy eating among school children; and if he will make a statement about the schemes' effectiveness.

Mr. Dunn: The information is not available. Many local education authorities are actively involved in promoting healthy eating at school.

Assisted Places Scheme

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has any plans to expand the assisted places scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Government are committed to expanding the assisted places scheme to an eventual total of 35,000 places in England and Wales. We have made a start by allocating some additional places to schools already participating in the APS from September 1988. Expansion will continue in line with the availability of resources.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Zimbabwe

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of Zimbabwe's policy of maintaining a military presence in Mozambique.

Mr. Mellor: We welcome the assistance which the Zimbabwe Government are providing to the Mozambican Government in their efforts to restore peace to Mozambique.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has made any representations to, or received representations from, the African National Congress with regard to that organisation's use of Zimbabwe as a route into South Africa.

Mr. Mellor: No, but we have made clear on many occasions our opposition to cross-border incursions from whatever quarter.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the use by the African National Congress of Zimbabwe as a route into South Africa.

Mr. Mellor: We have repeatedly condemned cross-border incursions. Our opposition to the use of violence by the ANC is well known.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy towards relations with Zimbabwe of the reported merging of the Zanu and Zapu political movements in Zimbabwe.

Mr. Mellor: This is an internal matter for Zimbabwe. We welcome the generally improved internal security situation which appears to have stemmed from it.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for United Kingdom policy on the maintenance of stability in southern Africa of Zimbabwe's policy towards its neighbouring countries and the African National Congress.

Mr. Mellor: We wish to encourage stability in the region and to that end we attach importance to regional co-operation in southern Africa, as is demonstrated by our support for SADCC and the FLS. Our policy towards the African National Congress is well known.

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Mellor: We do not make a charge for subject access to present or former members of staff. As all the applications have fallen into this category, no revenue from the payment of fees has accrued.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Mellor: Since 11 November 1987 the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received 27 requests for subject access, all from present or former members of staff.

THE ARTS

Eastern Arts

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister for the Arts what representations he has received since his last announcement of funding for Eastern Arts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received no such representations. The funding of regional arts associations is a matter for the Arts Council.

Arts Council (Consultants)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts (1) what information he has on the total costs of consultancies engaged by the Arts Council in each of the past five years;

(2) whether he will list the arts consultants that his Department has employed in each of the past five years, the projects on which they have worked and the cost per consultancy.

Mr. Luce [holding answers 29 April and 9 May 1988]: I have been advised that this information could be provided only at disproportionate cost. But the major consultants, and the projects for which they were engaged by the Arts Council in 1987-88, at a total cost of £145,103, were:

Consultant	Project
Dewe Rogerson Ltd.	An Urban Renaissance
Newchurch & Co. Ltd.	Upstart
Peat Marwick, McLintock & Co.	Advice on accountancy matters and incentive funding
Price Waterhouse & Co.	Incentive funding

ENVIRONMENT

Building Industry

111. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the forecasts for growth in the building industry in 1988 (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other European nations.

Mr. Trippier: Forecast percentage changes in construction output in real terms in 1988 over 1987 are set out in the table.

Country	Percentage change 1988-87
West Germany	−0·5
Belgium	−1·0
Denmark	−7·4
France	1·6
Great Britain	[1]3·0
Italy	0·8
Netherlands	−0·9
Norway	−1·4
Austria	1·0
Sweden	1·4
Switzerland	0·2

Forecasts for the United Kingdom are not available.

These forecasts were compiled by Euroconstruct, a biannual conference of European forecasting organisations, at its winter meeting at the beginning of December 1987. Britain is represented by NEDO and stockbrokers James Capel. The British forecasts reflect the views of NEDO's joint forecasting committee. My Department does not publish forecasts of construction output. The next Euroconstruct meeting is in July, when these forecasts will be reviewed.

In April the National Council of Building Material Producers forecast the change at 8 per cent. for Great Britain. It is expected that the forecast by NEDO's committee will be revised upwards when they meet in May-June.

Rent Acts

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many private properties there are for rent outside the Rent Acts in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: This information is not available.

Wetlands

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next intends to announce the designation of an area either as a site under the Ramsar convention on the conservation of wetlands of international importance or as a special protection area under the European Community directive on the conservation of wild birds or both.

Mr. Moynihan: We are currently considering a number of proposals put forward by the Nature Conservancy Council for the classification of sites as special protection areas under the EC birds directive and/or as wetlands of international importance under the Ramsar convention. While we shall endeavour to reach a decision on these cases as expeditiously as possible, I cannot forecast when the next classification of a site will be announced. Classification of sites in Scotland is the responsibility of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the criteria and guidelines for the identification of wetlands of international importance for listing under the Ramsar convention which were adopted by the third conference of contracting parties to the convention at Regina, Canada, in June 1987; and what is the extent to which the criteria and guidelines will be adopted in identifying wetlands of international importance in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: The criteria and guidelines for the identification of wetlands of international importance for listing under the Ramsar convention which were revised at the third conference of contracting parties at Regina, are as follows:

Criteria for Identifying Wetlands of International Importance for Designation for the List under Article 2 of the Ramsar Convention

As revised at the Third Meeting of the Conference of the Contracting Parties in Regina

A wetland is suitable for inclusion in the List if it meets any of the criteria set out below:

1. Criteria for assessing the value of representative or unique wetlands.

A wetland should be considered internationally important if it is a particularly good example of a specific type of wetland characteristic of its region.

2. General criteria for using plants or animals to identify wetlands of importance.

A wetland should be considered internationally important if

(a) it supports an appreciable assemblage of rare, vulnerable or endangered species or subspecies of plant or animal, or an appreciable number of individuals of any one or more of these species; or

(b) it is of special value for maintaining the genetic and ecological diversity of a region because of the quality and peculiarities of its flora and fauna; or

(c) it is of special value as the habitat of plants or animals at a critical stage of their biological cycles: or

(d) it is of special value for its endemic plant or animal species or communities.

3. Specific criteria for using waterfowl to identify wetlands of importance.

A wetland should be considered internationally important if:

(a) it regularly supports 20,000 waterfowl; or

(b) it regularly supports substantial numbers of individuals from particular groups of waterfowl, indicative of wetland values, productivity or diversity; or

(c) where data on populations are available, it regularly supports 1 per cent. of the individuals in a population of one species or subspecies of waterfowl.

LDDC (Extension)

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he proposes any extension to the London Docklands Development Corporation similiar to the extensions recently announced to the Merseyside Development Corporation.

Mr. Trippier: No.

Coastal Footpaths (North Devon)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many miles of coastal footpaths are now open to the public along the north Devon coast from Somerset to Cornwall; and how many more miles are needed to complete this route.

Mr. Moynihan: Approval last year of the link between Braunton and Westward Ho completed the Somerset and north Devon coast path. The whole of the Devon section of this long-distance route, which covers approximately 89 miles, is now open and available to the public.

Enterprise Zones

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report a list of those studies commissioned during the last five years by his Department on enterprise zones.

Mr. Trippier: My Department commissioned an evaluation of the enterprise zone experiment in 1986. No other studies have been commissioned in the last five years.

Water (Nitrate Content)

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the working party investigating the problem of the nitrate content in water is due to report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: I have nothing further to add to my statement of 20 January in answer to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Southend East (Mr. Taylor), at column 742.

Houses (Multiple Occupation)

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the local authorities in England and Wales which have been visited by the environmental health officer seconded to his Department to advise on houses in multiple occupation, since 3 November 1987.

Mrs. Roe: Since 3 November 1987 the Department's environmental health advisor has visited environmental health departments in the following English local authorities. The adviser's remit does not extend to Wales.

Blackpool
Camden
Hereford
Lancaster
Leeds
Manchester
Portsmouth
Reading
Thanet
Woodspring

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Ridley: £20.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Ridley: By 9 May 1988 my Department — including PSA — had received 426 applications. All but three have come from existing or former employees of the Department about their personal records.

Landlord and Tenant Act 1987

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he proposes to introduce the commencement orders relating to those parts of the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 so far unenacted.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend intends to make the commencement order for the remaining provisions in the Landlord and Tenant Act 1987 before the summer recess, after consultation with interested parties.

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he estimates that the availability of the community charge register to the general public will make the register more accurate; and whether he will list those organisations and individuals, other than individuals whose details appear in the register and the community charge officer, who are likely to be involved in maintaining the accuracy of information found on the register.

Mr. Howard: The general public will have a legitimate interest in the accuracy of the community charge register. We have therefore decided to ensure that an extract from the register will be available for public inspection. It is impossible to predict in detail what contacts there might be between registration officers and individuals or organisations.

Local Authorities (Finance)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 390, if he will list in the Official Report those authorities to which he has granted additional capital allocations or additional borrowing approval from 1 April 1981 to 9 March 1988 and, in each case, give the amount of the additional allocations and borrowing approval, the project for which it was issued and the reasons for issuing it.

Mr. Ridley: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. For instance, over 750 allocations were issued in response to the Department's letter of 29 October 1982, a copy of which I am sending to the hon. Member.

Zoological Society of London

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will announce details of further financial support to the Zoological Society of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: The Zoological Society of London has been receiving an annual grant and capital support from my Department for a number of years, in recognition of its special status as a centre of zoological excellence. This support has secured the viability of the society. It has enabled it in particular to sustain its famous collections of animals at Regent's Park and Whipsnade and to meet the costs of the Institute of Zoology, which enjoys considerable international renown.

Last year the society and my Department jointly engaged a team of leading consultants, headed by Peat Marwick McLintock, to report on the scope for improving the zoos' financial performance and implications for future Government support. We have decided, in the light of the consultants' findings, that a radical change in approach is needed. This recognises that ZSL has distinctive and separate roles in the field of scientific research and species conservation, on the one hand, and in the promotion of public understanding and enjoyment of animals, presented in attractive surroundings, on the other.

London zoo and Whipsnade have enjoyed enormous popularity with generations of London families and visitors from further afield. But the zoos need to renew their existing infrastructure and invest in new attractions to retain and build on this well-deserved popularity. The consultants have indicated that, given the right kinds of management skills, the zoos have the opportunity to remain world leaders and to become financially self-sufficient.

The Government accepts that ZSL's scientific work through the Institute of Zoology should receive continuing support. But as far as the zoos themselves are concerned, the Government believe that continued annual subsidy from public funds is no longer appropriate. Nevertheless, some limited further assistance is needed to set the society on its new path.

The Government and ZSL have accordingly reached agreement on the following terms:

(a) After the end of the present financial year, annual funding for ZSL's Institute of Zoology will be provided through the Universities Funding Council (which is intended to replace the University Grants Committee from 1 April 1989) and the University of London. From then on ultimate responsibility will rest with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Science.

(b) ZSL will establish a new operating subsidiary company, to run the two zoos. The company will have a new managing director and specialist management team provided by the Grant Leisure Group Ltd., initially for a period of three years.

(c) The society has undertaken that the management of the new company will produce a master development plan. My Department will then provide ZSL with a once-and-for-all capital endowment of up to £10 million, payable by November 1988. I have agreed with my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to the Treasury to fund these resources either from savings within my own programme, or if necessary by call on the Reserve.

(d) Subject to agreement on detailed terms, I propose to grant to the society a new 60-year lease in respect of the Regent's Park site, under the terms of the Crown Estate Act 1961. This will include an extra 10 acres of land from the park which the society has the option of taking under the Act, and arrangements will be made for the society to take over the management of the Gloucester Slips coach and car park. There will be no payment under the lease initially, but I shall be reviewing the terms of it once the society's financial position is assured.

The Government believe it is right to recognise, through the proposed endowment, the particular significance of London zoo's long association with Regent's Park and its impact on the amenities of the royal park as a whole. I am glad to say that Westminster city council welcomes the concept of looking at a long-term strategy for Regent's Park zoo. South Bedfordshire district council, too, is very supportive of the concept of a revitalised Whipsnade.

I am very grateful to the president and hon. treasurer of the society and their colleagues for the willing co-operation which has made all this possible. The society has shown its confidence in the management skills of Mr. Grant and his team, who bring with them an impressive record of success in zoos and other visitor attractions.

I am confident that these new arrangements will give the greatest possible scope to ZSL to make a success of its operations and to raise private capital for new investment. They will enable the Government to withdraw from what I consider to be an inappropriate regime of subsidy. The Government have done their bit. It is now up the public to show their support for ZSL and to demonstrate that they want to see zoos of this eminence continuing into the 21st century.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether water authorities are now able to start making preparations for the establishment of the National Rivers Authority.

Mr. Ridley: Following the granting of Royal Assent to the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Act, my noble Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Water has today invited the English water authorities to prepare schemes of organisation in accordance with guidelines he has sent to them. My hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Wales, has issued a similar invitation to the chairman of Welsh Water. Copies of the guidelines have been laid in the Libraries of both Houses.

Water and Sewerage

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what conclusions he has reached on the comments made in response to the consultation paper on water and sewerage law published by his Department and the Welsh Office in March 1986.

Mr. Moynihan: We received many positive and constructive responses to our consultation paper. As a result we have in some cases modified or discarded our original proposals.

We have, in particular, decided not to proceed with the proposals for transferring to undertakers responsibility for private sewers and water supply pipes. We recognise the problems faced by some householders, particularly those whose sewers are not adopted. These are, however, responsibilities which go with the properties concerned and purchasers of property need to take them into account just as they do other maintenance obligations. To transfer responsibility to undertakers would mean customers in general having to meet the cost. The existing legislation permits the owners of private sewers to apply to the relevant water authority to have their sewer adopted and there is a right of appeal to the Secretary of State if the authority refuses. This is an important safeguard, which we intend to preserve.

I am placing a summary of our revised proposals in the Libraries of both Houses. I believe the changes we propose will provide a modern operational framework which will serve the water industry well in the years ahead. Provision to implement these changes will be made in the main water privatisation Bill.

Sporting Events

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many football matches the Minister with responsibility for sport, the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan), has attended in the course of his official duties in the last year; and if he will list them.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 10 May 1988]: I have attended 15 matches so far this season; these being the following:

Venue	Date
Football League Centenary Match
Bobby Robson's 11 v. The Rest of the World	8 August 1987
West Germany v. England	9 September 1987
Tottenham Hotspur v. Wimbledon	31 October 1987
Metropolitan Police 5-a-side Tournament	26 November
Finals Wembley Arena	1987
Luton Town v. Derby County	16 January 1988
Hartlepool United v. Crewe Alexandra	27 February 1988
England v. Holland	23 March 1988
Derby County v. Arsenal	26 March 1988
Union Berlin v. Rott Weiss Erfurt
(East Germany)	1 April 1988
The Littlewoods Cup Final
Luton Town v. Arsenal	24 April 1988

In addition, I attended Charlton Athletic's home games against:

Venue	Date
Arsenal	3 October 1987
Chelsea	20 December 1987
Liverpool	23 January1988
Newcastle United	23 April 1988

and its game at Manchester United on 1 January 1988.

I shall also be attending the following:

Venue	Date
The FA Cup Final	14 May 1988
England v. Colombia—Rous Cup	24 May 1988
England v. Republic of Ireland—
European Championships in West Germany	12 June 1988

Green Belt

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards proposals for private sector sponsored transport infrastructure projects in the green belt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We are rigorously adhering to Government policy towards all proposals under the planning Acts for development in the green belt. This policy is clearly stated in PPG2—copies of which are in the Library—which states:

"Inside a Green Belt, approval should not be given, except in very special circumstances, for the construction of new buildings or for the change of use of existing buildings for purposes other than agriculture and forestry, outdoor sport, cemeteries, institutions standing in extensive grounds, or other uses appropriate to a rural area."

DEFENCE

Brigadier Geoffrey Slater

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the Army has required Brigadier Geoffrey Slater to retire from his post as head of 23 Base Workshops at Wettar, in the Federal Republic of Germany; if he is to be charged with any offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Following allegations against Brigadier Slater, which were made in an anonymous letter to Headquarters British Army of the Rhine, it was decided that it was in the best interests of Brigadier Slater and of the Army that he be removed from his appointment.

After a full investigation by the special investigation branch of the Royal Military Police and by Brigadier Slater's commanding officer and after taking legal advice, it was decided that it was more appropriate to deal with the matter administratively.

Air-Sea Combat Manoeuvring System

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his assessment of the air-sea combat manoeuvring system, in respect of its likely effects on North sea gas and oil installations.

Mr. Sainsbury: Further to my answer at column 622, on 31 March, British Aerospace's unsolicited proposals to construct an air combat manoeuvring installation in the North sea continue to be studied by this Department, taking account of all relevant factors. I have nothing further to add at this stage.

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Sainsbury: The revenue received by the Ministry of Defence from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984, is nil.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Sainsbury: As at 1 May 1988, 4,322 applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records have been received by the major pay and personnel database centres in the Ministry of Defence.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether there were any British Army personnel directly involved in the recent shooting incident in Gibraltar.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Yes.

Machrihanish Air Base

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the actual and proposed developments at Machrihanish air base following its increasing use by military aircraft and personnel.

Mr. Freeman: Subject to securing the necessary funding from NATO sources, it is intended to carry out a programme of modernisation of the facilities at RAF Machrihanish over the next seven years or so. Our plans are still at a relatively early stage of development, but we shall be approaching the local planning authorities very shortly for formal consultation on our outline proposals.

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will detail any alterations at present being carried out or being planned for the future at Machrihanish air base.

Mr. Freeman: Some work is curently under way to provide increased protection to existing facilities at Machrihanish. It is too early to give details of the proposed future modernisation projects, but further consultation will take place in the normal way with local planning authorities when design work reaches an appropriate stage.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Balance of Payments

112. Mr. Wareing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the state of the balance of payments on current account at the end of 1988.

Mr. Major: At Budget time my right hon. Friend the Chancellor forecast a deficit on the current account of £4 billion in 1988.

Business Expansion Scheme

113. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much was raised under the business expansion scheme in (a) 1987-88 and (b) 1986-87.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is provisionally estimated that over £165 million was raised in 1986-87. Information for 1987-88 is not yet available.

Trade Deficit

114. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries are predicting a greater trade deficit per head than the United Kingdom for 1988.

Mr. Lilley: On the OECD's last published forecasts for 1988, nine OECD countries will have larger current account deficits, per head of the population, than the United Kingdom.

Balance of Trade

115. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance of trade for 1988.

Mr. Major: At Budget time my right hon. Friend the Chancellor forecast a deficit on visible trade of £12½ billion in 1988. Combined with a projected surplus on invisibles of £8½ billion, the current account was forecast to be in deficit by £4 billion, less than 1 per cent. of GDP.

116. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance in manufactured trade for 1988.

120. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance in manufactured trade for 1988.

Mr. Major: At Budget time, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor forecast a deficit of £8½ billion on manufactured trade during 1988. With substantial surplus expected on trade in services and oil and on net earnings from overseas assets, the current account deficit is forecast to be £4 billion, less than 1 per cent. of GDP.

117. Dr. Marek: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of his estimate of the anual trade balance for 1988 has now been reached by the monthly figures.

118. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of his estimate of the annual trade balance for 1988 has now been reached by the monthly figures.

Mr. Major: At Budget time my right hon. Friend the Chancellor forecast a visible trade deficit of £12½ billion in 1988. The deficit in the first quarter was £3·6 billion.

Industrial Competitiveness

119. Mr. Allen McKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has any information on the effects of top tax rates on industrial competitiveness.

Mr. Major: Maintaining tax rates in line with or below those of our main competitors is vital if Britain is to retain and motivate its most talented and enterprising individuals.

Disposable Incomes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report his latest estimate of average per capita disposable incomes for each region of the United Kingdom, taking into account average mortgage repayments in each region.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave him on 1 March, at column 503. No more recent information will be available until towards the end of the year.

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984;

(2) how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Brooke: The Treasury has received no applications for subject access under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984. It has received no revenue since 11 November 1987 from the payment of related fees.

Taxation (Harmonisation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish tables showing the changes which would occur in tax levels on petrol, cigarettes, alcohol and other items of consumer expenditure in consequence of the measures recommended by the European Commission for the harmonisation of indirect taxation.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 23 March at columns 124-26 (tables (a) and (c)) and 24 March at column 196.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the increase or decrease in tax revenue stemming from petrol and diesel oil, alcohol, tobacco and other items, respectively, in consequence of the recommendations of the EEC Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to the hon. Member for Newham, South (Mr. Spearing) on 23 March at columns 124-26 (table (b)) and 24 March at column 196.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has received information from the EEC Commission about whether its tax harmonisation proposals will be subject to unanimity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: No such information is necessary. The unanimity requirement is written into article 17 of the Single European Act.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact on United Kingdom industry and commerce of the proposals by the EEC Commission on tax on petrol and diesel oil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: We estimate that the direct impact of the Commission's proposals for the harmonisation of the duties on petrol and diesel oil would be a reduction in duty payable of approximately £250 million in a full year.

VAT

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he now expects to receive the decision of the European Court on the case initiated by the Commission on the levying of value added tax on gas, electricity, water, sewerage and protective clothing and footwear supplied to industry and commerce and on the levying of value added tax on all new commercial and industrial buildings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 10 May 1988]: The European Court of Justice has not yet given an indication of a likely date for delivery of its judgment.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Teaching Company Scheme

6. Dr. Hampson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to promote industry's awareness of the teaching company scheme.

Mr. Butcher: The teaching company scheme is being promoted as part of the enterprise initiative.

Advertising Agencies

20. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which advertising agencies have been used by his Department in the last year.

70. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which advertising agencies have been used by his Department in the last year.

Mr. Butcher: The agencies contracted to work on DTI campaigns for the financial year 1987-88 were—

Ayer Barker
Charles Barker
D'Arcy Masius Benton and Bowles
Doyle, Dane, Bernbach and Needham
WCRS Matthews Marcantonio
J. Walter Thompson
DBF Advertising

Single European Market

21. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether, in negotiating measures aimed at the completion of a single European market, he will make it his policy to encourage other member countries of the European Community to adopt a comprehensive programme of deregulation similar to that carried out in Britain.

Mr. Alan Clark: Yes. It is a cornerstone of our policy on completing the single market that no measure should impose unnecessary burdens on business. There is general agreement that the benefits of the single market can best be realised in a liberal market with the minimum of red tape. We therefore frequently discuss deregulation with other member states.

77. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has had to efforts to ensure that business men in all regions of the country are made aware of the opportunities presented by the completion of the single European market in 1992.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are already taking a number of measures to alert business to the single European market and the vital importance of preparing for it now. These include regional conferences, detailed literature, national advertising and a telephone hotline. The single market campaign will run until 1992, but its exact form will be continually assessed in the light of current needs.

92. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the Government's preparations for the European single market.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government have launched a five-year campaign to encourage firms in every part of the country to prepare for completion of the single European market. As part of the campaign there will be 20 regional conference and many more seminars. This will be supported by a comprehensive information service including detailed literature, DTI's Spearhead computer database, our 1992 telephone hotline, and national advertising.

Local Enterprise

22. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has met the representatives of the ACC, ADC and the AMA to discuss the report "Stimulating Local Enterprise — The Local Authority Role."

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Business Prospects (Warrington)

23. Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his assessment of business prospects in the Warrington area.

Mr. Atkins: United Kingdom GDP is forecast to increase by 3 per cent. and manufacturing output by 5 per cent. this year. The strengthening of incentives in this year's Budget and the help available through the enterprise initiative will ensure that business in Warrington continues to be well placed to take its full share of this growth.

Consumer Protection

24. Mr. Morley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received seeking new legislation to protect consumers.

Mr. Butcher: Suggestions for new legislation to protect consumers are received from a wide range of organisations and individuals. Careful consideration is given to all proposals, bearing in mind the Government's wish to avoid placing undue burdens on business. Our aim is rather to protect consumers by ensuring that they have good and sufficient information on which to make a reasoned choice.

Manufactured Goods

25. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current deficit in manufactured goods with the EEC up to the most recent practicable date in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to March 1988, there was an estimated deficit of £10·5 billion on the balance of payments basis.

38. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the level of exports of manufactured goods in 1988 so far; and what equivalent information he has for 1987.

72. Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the level of exports of manufactured goods in 1988 so far; and what was the equivalent figure for 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first three months of 1988 exports of manufactured goods were valued at £14·9 billion. The equivalent figure for the first three months of 1987 was £14·8 billion.

Management Buyouts

26. Mr. John Browne: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the total value of management buyouts in (a) 1987 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Butcher: About £3·2 billion and £1·2 billion respectively.

Ministerial Visits (Northumberland)

27. Mr. Beith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent ministerial visits have been made by Ministers from his Department to Northumberland.

Mr. Atkins: I visited Northumberland on 30 March.

Aircraft Equipment Manufacturers

28. Mr. Bill Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will consider making launch aid available for aircraft equipment manufacturers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department's policy has been to provide launch aid only to airframe and aeroengine manufacturers. Equipment companies may be eligible to apply for other forms of support under the Department's enterprise initiative.

Microwave Distribution System

29. Mr. Hayes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the latest information he has on the feasibility of the microwave distribution system.

Mr. Butcher: A report on the economic and technical feasibility of microwave video distribution systems, commissioned from Touche Ross by my Department and the Home Office, was delivered in December 1987. The report shows that, given certain assumptions about the spectrum that might be made available, six and perhaps up to 12 additional television services could be provided to areas covering some 70 per cent. of United Kingdom households, though not everyone within such areas would receive an acceptable signal. The Government are at present considering the report together with other information, in the context of wider decisions on the future structure of broadcasting.

Business Consultancy Service

30. Mr. Favell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department's proposed business consultancy service will extend to start-ups; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Start-up companies are not specifically precluded from applying for the business planning initiative, but experience has shown that their needs are generally best helped through agencies such as the small firms service and local enterprise agencies. The consultancy initiatives are aimed primarily at helping existing business to become aware of new methods and opportunities through the use of specialist outside advice.

Fixed Investment

31. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which Overseas Economic Co-operation and Development countries spend (a) a larger and (b) a smaller share of their gross domestic product on fixed investment than the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: Comparisons for most OECD countries are readily available only for 1986. In that year the following OECD countries spent a larger share of the GDP on fixed investment than the United Kingdom:

Australia, Austria, Canada, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Japan, Luxembourg, Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Portugal, Spain, Sweden, Turkey and the United States.

Belgium spent a smaller share of GDP on fixed investment than the United Kingdom. Comparable figures for other OECD countries are not available.

Computing Service Industry

32. Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to improve the methods for assessing the performance of the United Kingdom computing service industry in comparison with overseas competitors.

Mr. Butcher: I do not seek to assess the performance of the private sector. The Department does, however, collect and publish information about the billings of the computing services sector (including its billings to overseas clients). These arrangements have recently been strengthened to improve the quality of the figures. This information is published in the relevant Business Monitor. The Government also support the efforts of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development to establish a framework which will enable international comparisons of this kind of information to be made.

Solvents

33. Mr. Janner: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will introduce legislation to provide that potentially dangerous solvents in shops shall be kept in locked cabinets.

Mr. Butcher: No. Re-Solv, the non-profit-making body set up by the industry to combat solvent abuse, is issuing guidance to retailers, part funded by Government, which advises them to keep "sniffable" products locked up, out of reach, under the counter or under direct supervision. I prefer this to compulsion.

Competitiveness

34. Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has recently received on the United Kingdom's competitiveness.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Most of the contacts that my Department has with industry and commerce involve having a bearing on United Kingdom competitiveness in one way or another.

Society of British Aerospace Companies

35. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he expects to meet the president of the Society of British Aerospace Companies; and what matters will be raised.

Mr. Atkins: There are no plans for a meeting at present. However should the SBAC president wish to see me I would of course be happy to discuss whatever matters he wished to raise.

New Technology (North-West)

36. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to encourage the growth of new technology industries in the north-west of England.

Mr. Butcher: The Government have created the necessary conditions for such growth by establishing the right climate for enterprise and the development of new industry nationally.

In the north-west, as elsewhere, my Department is actively promoting the various elements of the enterprise initiative, which give particular attention to the needs of areas such as the north-west. We are working with a number of regional bodies on initiatives to attract both new technology industries to the region, to foster the growth of new technology-based firms and the application of new technology to existing industry.

The enterprise initiative offers wide-ranging support for all business, including specialised consultancy advice for small and medium-sized firms. In the assisted areas and urban programme areas support for up to two thirds of the costs of such consultancy projects is available. Elsewhere we support 50 per cent. of the costs. We have introduced a special scheme — regional enterprise grants — to help firms in the development areas, with fewer than 25 employees to finance their innovation and investment projects, and have extended the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART). Assistance is available towards the cost of collaborative research projects, and regional selective assistance is available for investment projects by new and existing firms in the assisted areas.

The Department has recently announced an increased grant of £450,000 to INWARD, the north-west's regional development organisation concerned with attracting inward investment, including new technology companies, to the region.

English Estates North West is helping in the development of new technology companies in the region through its investment in Wavertree technology park in Liverpool, the Salford university business park and the technology exchange at Bolton.

The Department's regional office has been closely involved in the formation of Nimtech-NW, a private sector initiative to encourage and accelerate the development of science-based industries in the north-west. Nimtech is now the focus for the north-west's regional technology centre, which, with Government funding support, is working in close co-operation with the region's eight universities and polytechnics to improve technology transfer and skills training throughout the region. The region has a well-established tradition of collaboration between industry and the academic sector. This strength is further reflected in Manchester recently attracting the new private sector and Government sponsored centre for exploitation for science and technology, and Salford university winning the competition to host the Department's national advanced robotics research centre.

Columbus Project

37. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about British involvement in the Columbus project.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my statement in the House on 18 April in response to questions by my hon. Friends the Members for Corby (Mr. Powell) and for Southend, East (Mr. Taylor).

Companies (Extra-territorial Controls)

39. Mr. Stott: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement about his policy towards the United States Government exerting extra-territorial controls over United Kingdom firms.

Mr. Alan Clark: We have asserted on many occasions our rejection of US claims to extra-territorial jurisdiction which infringe on United Kingdom sovereignty.

Sub-Post Offices

40. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what discussions he has had with the chairman of the Post Ofice on the problems of rural sub-post offices.

Mr. Butcher: My right hon. and learned Friend meets the chairman of the Post Office from time to time to discuss matters of current interest including rural sub-post offices.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what were the total hours of opening of sub-post offices in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mr. Butcher: This is a matter for the Post Office and I have asked the chairman of the Post Office to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has met representatives of the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters and Mistresses to discuss rural sub-post offices.

Mr. Butcher: I met representatives of the National Federation of Sub-Postmasters on 15 October last year to discuss issues of interest to their members, including rural sub-post offices.

"Take the Initiative" Campaign

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the amount of public funds spent on his Department's current "Take the Initiative" advertising campaign.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated cost up to the end of May of the current DTI advertising campaign to promote the enterprise initiative is £7·4 million.

Trade Balance

Mr. Wall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which countries of the Economic European Community the United Kingdom is running a positive trade balance.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster with which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries the United Kingdom is running a positive trade balance.

Mr. Alan Clark: All European Community countries are members of the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development. In the last 12 months United Kingdom trade was in surplus with the United States of America, Australia, Canada, Irish Republic, Greece and Spain.

Enterprise Initiative (North-West)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give details of the support that has been made available under the enterprise initiative to businesses in the north-west.

Mr. Atkins: A total of 2,319 specific inquiries for consultancy support under the Department's enterprise initiative have been received from businesses in the north-west up to 29 April 1988. At that date, these inquiries had resulted in 721 applications for consultancies being processed. A total of 389 business reviews have been completed, of which 322 have been forwarded to scheme contractors.

Insider Dealing

44. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current operation of the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department considers all allegations of possible contraventions of the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 which are referred to it. In appropriate cases, if the circumstances suggest there may have been such a contravention, inspectors are appointed under section 177 of the Financial Services Act 1986 to carry out an investigation. There are at present 15 cases where inspectors are investigating possible contraventions, and nine cases are under consideration for investigation. Since January 1987 there have been three convictions and one acquittal on charges of contravening the Act. Criminal proceedings have begun in three more cases. The operation of the Act is kept under review.

Foreign Companies

45. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he plans to continue to make support available to foreign companies wishing to set up operations in any of the assisted areas.

Mr. Atkins: The DTI's enterprise initiative includes a range of assistance available in the assisted areas to United Kingdom and foreign-owned companies for investment projects which meet the relevant criteria.

Trade Deficit

46. Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the trade deficit so far in 1988.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the first three months of 1988 there was an estimated deficit of £1·8 billion on the current account.

Basildon

47. Mr. Amess: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what figures he has for the growth in the number of businesses in Basildon.

Mr. Atkins: There are no figures which indicate precisely the growth of businesses in Basildon. However the Business Statistics Office register for businesses for VAT purposes shows the following for Basildon district:

Number of businesses registered for VAT

	Number
End 1981	2,370
End 1986	3,043
Per cent. increase	28·45

Figures for 1987 are not yet available

Manufacturing Investment

48. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is aware of any research on the effect of interest rates on the level of manufacturing investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has on the connection between the level of manufacturing investment and the level of interest rates.

Mr. Atkins: There has been a large amount of research on this subject, including "Factor Prices in the Treasury Model", by C. Kelly and D. Owen (GES working paper No. 83). A copy is lodged in the House of Commons Library.

65. Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster by how much manufacturing investment fell between 1979 and 1987.

Mr. Butcher: The latest estimate of investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, for 1987 is £7·4 billion at 1980 prices. The corresponding investment in 1979 and 1983 was £8·2 billion and £5·6 billion respectively at 1980 prices.

89. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the most recent figures for manufacturing investment; what the percentage change has been since 1979; and which Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries have a greater increase or decrease over this period.

Mr. Alan Clark: The most recent figures of investment in manufacturing industry, including leased assets, are for 1987 — for which the latest estimate is £7·4 billion at 1980 prices. The corresponding investment in 1979 and 1983 was £8·2 billion and £5·6 billion respectively at 1980 prices. These figures show a decrease of 9 per cent. between 1979 and 1987, and an increase of 33 per cent. between 1983 and 1987. Figures for OECD countries are not available on a comparable basis over this period. Available figures for OECD countries are published in "OECD National Accounts 1973-1985".

Scandinavia (Trade)

49. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on the current level of trade with Scandinavia.

Mr. Alan Clark: For the three months to March 1988, United Kingdom trade with Scandinavia was: exports £1,229·6 million and imports £2,557·2 million. These figures should be treated with more than the usual caution because of major changes to customs procedures introduced in January 1988, details of which were given in a reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 7 December 1987, Official Report, columns 34-35.

Restrictive Trade Practices

50. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to his recent Green Paper on restrictive trade practices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The reaction to the Green Paper has been generally favourable, although we are as yet in the early stages of consultation and have therefore had few formal responses.

Exchange Rate

51. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received from industry concerning the effects of changes in the exchange rate.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: My Department has recently received representations from a number of firms and trade organisations about the possible effects of recent exchange rate movements.

83. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his latest assessment of the impact of the sterling exchange rate on the export performance of British industry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Export performance is affected by a variety of factors, of which variation in exchange rates is only one. The improved design, quality and reliability of many British products has contributed substantially to our improved competitiveness and export performance in recent years.

Airbus

52. Mr. Cartiss: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met French and German Ministers to discuss the Airbus project.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last met French and German Ministers to discuss the Airbus programme in Hanover on 5 May. We discussed the reorganisation of Airbus Industrie and co-operation between Airbus Industrie and McDonnell Douglas.

61. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made on the constitutional and financial restructuring of Airbus Industrie in order to make it more publicly accountable.

Mr. Atkins: I and my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster met the aerospace Ministers of France and the Federal Republic of Germany and the Spanish ambassador to Germany, representing the aerospace Minister of Spain, in Hanover on 5 May to consider the preliminary response of the Airbus partners to the proposals for restructuring the consortium contained in the report of the four independent experts known as the Airbus "wise men".

We noted with satisfaction that the Airbus partners and Airbus Industrie have responded promptly in studying the wise men's recommendations and reaching agreement in principle to their proposals. We asked the industrialists to start to implement the restructuring without delay with a view to establishing the structure of the new organisation by autumn, with full implementation from the end of 1988 at the latest.

Imports (Voluntary Restraint)

53. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he will consider publishing official estimates of the effects of voluntary restraint arrangements on imports into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Alan Clark: Voluntary restraint arrangements generally seek to limit imports of a particular product or range of products to agreed levels. The effects of such arrangements on imports vary according to the levels and coverage of the agreement, the extent to which it is respected and whether there is scope to switch production to areas that are perceived as less sensitive by the industry. The conditions set in individual voluntary restraint agreements are not published and the advice I received on the impact on imports was based on commercially confidential information.

Advertising

54. Dr. Reid: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the amount spent by his Department on advertising for each year since 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Information is not readily available for expenditure on advertising other than that spent centrally by my Department.

The figures which are readily available are:

	£ million
1984-85	2·1
1985-86	1·2
1986-87	0·9
1987-88	[1]7·9

[1] provisional.

Budget allocations for advertising during 1988-89 are still under discussion.

British Steel

55. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received regarding the proposals to transfer British Steel to the private sector.

Mr. Atkins: I have received a small number of letters from various parties about points of detail. I have received a few representations about the principle of privatisation.

CBI

56. Mrs. Wise: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the Confederation of British Industry; and what was discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Amber Valley (Mr. Oppenheim).

Small Businesses

57. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what support is being made available to small businesses under the enterprise initiative to encourage innovation in new technology.

Mr. Butcher: Small firms can participate in collaborative research, with other firms, higher education institutions, technology organisations, or Government research establishments. The Department offers grants of up to 50 per cent. of the cost. The teaching company scheme is also available.

Firms with fewer than 200 employees can compete for 100 Awards in the small firms merit award for research and technology (SMART) competition. The awards are for 75 per cent. of the cost of developing a new product or process (up to total costs of £50,000). Applications close on 30 June 1988.

In development areas, firms with fewer than 25 employees can apply for regional enterprise grants. The innovation grant provides 50 per cent. of the agreed project cost up to a maximum grant of £25,000. I will arrange to send my hon. Friend details of these schemes.

Research and Development

58. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures available for the level of funding for research and development provided by industry.

Mr. Maude: Industry spent £3·6 billion on the research and development which it performed in 1986. The information was contained in an article on the results of the 1986 survey of industrial research and development published in British Business on 5 February 1988. A copy of this is in the Library.

74. Mr. McLeish: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he is satisfied with the level of spending by industry on research and development.

Mr. Butcher: There are some companies and industries in the United Kingdom whose innovation record is outstanding, but in general the level and growth of British industry's spending on R and D have been lower as a proportion of GDP than its main overseas competitors. The Government have created the right climate to enable industry to invest more in R and D. A major objective of my Department's innovation policy is to encourage industry to fund more of its own R and D and to encourage co-operation between companies and the academic science base, for the purpose of increased wealth creation and competitiveness.

Aerospace Industry

59. Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what will be the effects on the United Kingdom aerospace industry of the decision by Her Majesty's Government to proceed with development of the European fighter aircraft.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The United Kingdom will have a 33 per cent. share in the development phase of the European fighter aircraft. British Aerospace and Rolls-Royce will be playing a leading role, and major opportunities will be opened up for British industry. The development phase alone will give direct long-term employment to an estimated 3,000-4,000 people in the United Kingdom.

Consumer Goods (Safety)

60. Mr. Harris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what measures he has introduced to improve the safety standards applying to consumer goods.

Mr. Butcher: The safety of consumers has been greatly improved by the implementation of the Consumer Protection Act 1987. From 1 October 1987, under the general safety requirement, it became a criminal offence to supply any consumer product that is not reasonably safe. This requirement is closely linked to standards of safety. The European Community directive on product liability, implemented by the same Act, came into force on 1 March 1988 which means that, if defective products reach the market and people are injured by them, it will be much easier to obtain redress through the courts.

In addition to the general safety requirement, the safety of a range of products is covered by specific regulations. New regulations are to be introduced covering the flammability of the upholstered furniture and bedding; and it is the intention to introduce further regulations to implement a number of EC directives, including those covering the safety of toys and certain electical products.

Departmental Offices (Relocation)

62. Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress has been made in the relocation out of London of offices under his Department's control since 1979.

Mr. Butcher: My Department is making good progress. Some 50 per cent. of the Department is already outside London and plans to relocate at least a further 1,600 posts in the period 1987-91 are being implemented.

Misleading Credit Advertising

63. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress he is making in his campaign to tackle misleading credit advertising.

Mr. Maude: On 23 March my Department circulated revised draft regulations which simplify and clarify the existing provisions of the Consumer Credit (Advertisements) Regulations and contain important additional safeguards for borrowers, particularly in the area of secured lending. Comments on the draft regulations have been requested by 20 May 1988.

Financial Services Act

67. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on the implementation of the Financial Services Act.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Section 3 of the Financial Services Act was brought into force on 29 April. The other principal provisions in the Act, relating to the authorisation and regulation of persons carrying on investment business in the United Kingdom, were also commenced on that date.

Inner City Policy

68. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on inner city policy.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government have stepped up the attack on urban decay and have given priority to encouraging investment in inner city areas through a range of measures amounting to some £3,000 million in 1988-89. They launched a new Action for Cities drive in March 1988 which included a new urban development corporation in Sheffield and the extension of the existing corporation in Merseyside, in addition to the earlier announcement of proposals to establish new corporations in Leeds, central Manchester and Bristol; streamlined grants to encourage the development of inner city land and buildings; more help for small businesses in inner city areas; further Government support for links between schools and employers; new crime prevention initiatives and better inner city roads. Good progress has already been made with these new measures.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment is very shortly to lay orders before the House to establish the urban development corporations in Leeds, Bristol, central Manchester and Sheffield. Approvals worth over £7 million have been made for projects eligible for city grant.

The first of six new small firms service offices was opened by my hon. Friend the Minister of State, Department of Employment in Sheffield on 19 April. Others are planned for Leicester, Derby, Blackburn, Middlesbrough and Wolverhampton.

My hon. Friend the Minister of State, Home Office launched the first of 20 safer cities crime prevention projects in Wolverhampton on 7 April.

Two successful breakfast presentations to senior business men have been held in Newcastle and Leeds, with others to follow in Manchester, Birmingham, Liverpool and London. They have helped to encourage business interest in inner city regeneration, and nearly 100 companies have made positive offers of help.

Over 40 inquiries have been received from companies, employer groups and other organisations about the schools-industry compacts initiative, and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment has written to major employers inviting them to take advantage of development funds available to establish compacts.

Several possible projects have been identified for potential support under the local enterprise agency project scheme. New city action teams based in Leeds and Nottingham, in addition to those already established in Birmingham, Liverpool, London, Manchester and Newcastle upon Tyne are helping to pull together the various Government programmes involved and to sustain the momentum of local regeneration. At neighbourhood level, 16 inner city task forces support projects which open up job and enterprise opportunities for local residents. They have to date made contact with some 400 companies.

Internal Market

69. Mr. Conway: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response there has been to the Europe Open for Business campaign.

71. Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what response he has had to his plans for preparing British companies for completion of the internal market in 1992.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Government are already taking a number of measures to alert business to the single European market and the vital importance of preparing for it now. These include regional conferences, detailed literature, national advertising and a telephone hotline. The single market campaign will run until 1992 but its exact form will be continually assessed in the light of current needs.

Govan Shipbuilders

73. Mr. Millan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if any decision has yet been reached on the possible sale of Govan Shipbuilders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. British Shipbuilders are still negotiating with Kvaerner Industries.

Space Research

75. Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a further statement on his policy towards British participation in space research projects.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) on 18 April 1988 at columns 350-51.

Car Production

76. Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the latest figures for car production in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Atkins: Provisional figures indicate that production of passenger cars in March 1988 was 106,000 units, seasonally adusted.

Timber Industry

79. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met representatives of the timber industry to discuss the future of home-produced timber; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: My ministerial colleagues and I are in close touch with representatives of markets for home-produced and other timber, but I have not yet met representatives of the producers of such timber.

Spearhead Single Market Database

80. Mr. Gwilym Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what type of information will be made available to business through the Spearhead single market database.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Spearhead database gives information on current and prospective measures in the single market programme and gives access to the full texts of the relevant Community legislation. It provides details of measures which have been adopted by the Community, but which have not yet entered into force; summaries of proposals under discussions, together with contacts in the appropriate Government Departments; and information on other proposals which the Commission has said it intends to table between now and 1992.

Balance of Trade (West Germany)

81. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recently available figure for the balance of trade with West Germany.

Mr. Alan Clark: In the 12 months to March 1988, United Kingdom visible trade with FR Germany was in deficit by £6·8 billion on the overseas trade statistics basis.

Schools and Industry

82. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress he is making towards achieving his specific objectives for forging closer links between schools and industry.

Mr. Butcher: A number of measures to forge closer collaborative links between industry and schools were announced as part of the enterprise initiative in the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise" published on 12 January 1988. Three new targets were set:

—every year, 10 per cent. of teachers should have the opportunity to gain some personal experience of the world of business;

—every young person should have two or more weeks of work experience, suited to his or her ability and needs, before leaving school;

every trainee teacher should gain an appreciation of the needs of employers and the importance of links between schools and employers.

In addition, the Government's policy statement "Action of Cities", announced by the Prime Minister on 7 March contained a range of initiatives including the Department of Employment's proposals to develop compacts, initially in 12 of the urban programme areas. My Department will be working closely with DES and MSC to foster these partnerships and a wide range of other links between schools and business.

British Shipbuilders

84. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has received on the future of British Shipbuilders.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received a number of representations.

86. Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders; and what was discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I remain in close touch with the chairman of British Shipbuilders on the full range of issues currently of concern to the corporation.

100. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of British Shipbuilders; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I remain in close touch with the chairman of British Shipbuilders on the full range of issues currently of concern to the corporation.

Rating Reform

85. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will discuss with the Post Office Director of Counters the practicality of making poll tax payable through post offices.

Mr. Butcher: This would be a commercial matter for negotiation between the Post Office and the statutory levying authorities and I have no plans to discuss it with the Post Office.

Manufacturing

87. Mr. Irvine: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the increase in manufacturing productivity in Britain since 1979; and what is the comparable record of the United Kingdom's major industrial competitors.

Mr. Butcher: Between 1979 and 1987, output per head in the manufacturing sector increased by 37 per cent. The comparable increases for our major competitors are:

	Percentage
Italy[1]	35
USA	31
Japan	26
Canada	24
France[1]	19
Germany	16

[1] First three quarters of 1987 only.

Source:
United Kingdom: CSO.
Other countries: OECD and IMF.

96. Mr. Knox: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and what was the figure for the same months 14 years ago.

Mr. Butcher: In February 1988 manufacturing output was at a level of 110·3, based on 1980 equal to 100. This is over 1 per cent, higher than the level of 109·0 for February 1974. But my hon. Friend will appreciate that monthly data can be erratic. A firmer basis for comparison would be that in the three months to February 1988, manufacturing output was over 2 per cent. higher than in the same period 14 years ago and over 21 per cent. higher than in the trough of the recession in 1981.

Local Businesses

88. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he has taken to improve communications between his Department and business at a local level.

Mr. Atkins: The close communications which my Department's regional offices already maintain with business is being reinforced at the local level by the opening of some 24 satellite offices throughout England making 35 local offices in all. DTI regional offices have a particular responsibility for marketing the DTI services for business described in the White Paper "DTI — the department for Enterprise" laid before the House in January and to which business response has been excellent.

In addition, 16 task forces and eight city action teams have been set up part of whose role is to assist companies wishing to become involved in urban regeneration. With Ministers from other Departments I am meeting senior representatives of business and industry at a series of working breakfasts to highlight opportunities for them in the inner cities.

Inner City Renewal

90. Mr. Andrew Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how he plans to increase further private sector investment in inner city renewal.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government will encourage greater private investment in inner cities through the new and expanded urban development corporations, city grant, which bridges the gap between cost and profitability and by other new measures aimed at small firms, including support under the enterprise initiative to help inner city businesses improve their performance. We also intend to increase the supply of managed accommodation for new businesses in inner cities through English Estates. Locally, city action teams and task forces will continue to work in partnership with business. Ministers are giving a series of breakfast presentations to senior business men in major cities to give companies practical advice about how they can help the drive to make the deprived districts of their own city more prosperous and how the Government can support them.

Council of Ministers (Shipbuilding)

91. Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last discussed shipbuilding within the European Community's Council of Ministers; and what was the content of the discussions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I last discussed shipbuilding matters in the Council of Ministers in December 1987. The topic was the Renaval programme of assistance to regions affected by the Community-wide decline in merchant shipbuilding. At that meeting I pressed hard for rapid progress to be made on the scheme. Detailed negotiations are continuing.

Departmental Advertising

93. Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the principal objectives of his Department's advertising and promotional activities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The emphasis of DTI policies as set out in the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise" is on transferring information particularly to small and medium sized companies. Advertising and related promotional activities are quick and efficient ways of achieving improved communications with business. We are particularly seeking to improve business managers' knowledge of the services available to companies under the enterprise initiative, the variety of ways in which companies can work with Government in regenerating inner cities, the need to prepare for the European single market in 1992 and the opportunities for trade and investment in Japan.

101. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his Department's planned spending on (a) television advertising and (b) press advertising in the current year.

Mr. Butcher: The overall press and television advertising plans for DTI in the current year are still under discussion. Major commitments during the first three months of 1988-89 are as follows:

	Television £ million	Press £ million
Single European Market Campaign	3·8	0·62
Enterprise Initiative Campaign	—	0·63

Mergers

94. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what has been the response to his recent paper on the policy and procedures of merger control.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The paper set out the conclusions of the review of mergers policy, and took account of views submitted during the course of the review. The main lines of these conclusions have been known for some time, and have attracted some public comment; but the paper did not formally invite responses, and my Department has received none.

Privatisation

95. Mr. Barron: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what assessment he has made in planning his policy on privatisation of industries for which he is responsible of the extent to which standards of service to customers have been maintained in privatised industries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The circumstances surrounding each privatisation are different and all relevant factors are taken into account in the planning of each new privatisation. However, I believe that standards of service to customers are more likely to be improved when the management of the business has full commercial freedom and is exposed to the pressures of a competitive market.

Chemicals Industry

97. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what forecasts he has for the level of new investment in the chemicals industry in 1988.

Mr. Atkins: The Chemical Industry Association's investment intentions survey for 1988 shows that capital spending in the chemical sector in 1988 is expected to rise to £1,740 million, which allowing for inflation is an increase of nearly 19 per cent. on 1987.

Consumers Association

98. Mrs. Golding: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when he last met the chairman of the Consumers Association; and what was discussed.

Mr. Butcher: I met the chairman and director general of the Consumers Association on Wednesday 23 March and we discussed a number of topics relevant to consumers.

Business (Best Practice)

99. Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to promote best practice to British business.

Mr. Atkins: The enterprise initiative is a national programme which aims to raise the performance of management by promoting the use of best practice. The key element in the enterprise initiative is the six consultancy initiatives, covering marketing (including export marketing), design, quality, manufacturing systems, business planning, and financial and information systems. Their aim is to improve management skills in these key areas in small and medium-sized firms by encouraging them to use specialist outside advice.

Other elements of the enterprise initiative, notably the business and education initiative and the research and technology initiative, are also concerned with technology transfer and encouraging the promotion of best practice throughout industry and commerce.

Investment and Job Creation

102. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what steps he is taking to ensure that investment and the creation of employment will be secured in areas of high unemployment which have recently been classified as requiring the maximum level of regional support.

Mr. Atkins: The DTI, through its recently launched enterprise initiative, offers a range of incentives to encourage business development throughout the country. Regional selective assistance is available for investment projects undertaken by firms in assisted areas; regional enterprise grants are available for small firms in development areas with fewer than 25 employees to support investment and innovation projects; and in all asssisted and urban programme areas the DTI will pay two thirds of the cost of consultancy projects in marketing, design, quality, manufacturing systems, business planning, and financial and information systems.

Drug Companies

103. Mr. Franks: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the level of capital investment by Britain's drug companies in (a) 1987 and (b) 1986.

Mr. Atkins: In 1986, the latest year for which investment data by industry are available, the net capital expenditure in the pharmaceutical products industry was £396 million, at current prices. The comparable figure for 1985 is £346 million.

British National Space Centre

104. Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he has any proposals to strengthen the British national space centre.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: As announced in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Corby (Mr. Powell) on 18 April 1988 at columns 350-51, Mr. Arthur Pryor has been appointed director general of the British national space centre. He will be reviewing the effectiveness of the centre as part of his new responsibilities.

Robots

105. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the level of usage of robots in British industry; and what equivalent information he has about other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

107. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the level of usage of robots in British industry; and what equivalent information he has for other Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries.

Mr. Butcher: Robots in use in British industry numbered 4,303 at the end of 1987. This shows a total increase of 14·5 per cent. and an increased growth rate of 30 per cent. on the previous year's figures.

The table shows the level of usage of robots in the OECD countries in 1986. The figures are produced by the International Federation of Robotics.

Country	Robots in use in 1986
Australia	800
Austria	250
Belgium	1,050
Denmark	210
Finland	336

New Car Sales

106. Mr. Janman: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what was the level of new car sales for the first quarter of 1988.

Mr. Atkins: There were 584,832 new cars registered in the United Kingdom in the first quarter of 1988.

Rover Group

108. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what recent representations he has received regarding the proposed takeover of Rover Group by British Aerospace.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Since my statement on 29 March we have received 25 letters on this subject.

Scotch Whisky

109. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what progress is being made to ensure the implementation of GATT agreements with Japan to protect the Scotch whisky industry from discriminatory import taxation.

Mr. Alan Clark: This issue was high on the agenda when my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister met the Japanese Prime Minister, Mr. Takeshita, last week. Mr. Takeshita was left in no doubt that we attach the greatest importance to a speedy resolution of this problem, with the introduction of a non-discriminatory tax system which allows Scotch whisky to compete on equal terms with other spirits. He undertook to take a personal interest in the resolution of this issue.

Confectionery Companies

110. Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make it his policy to prevent the acquisition of British confectionery companies by Swiss interests.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Each individual case will be for consideration in the normal way under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act.

Investigation Policy

Mr. Hargreaves: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will make a statement on his policy on investigation under the Companies Act 1985 and the Financial Services Act 1986.

Mr. Maude: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has been reviewing the investigation powers and procedures under these Acts in the light of recent experience of operating them.

Fair and efficient markets depend on effective enforcement of the law and of self-regulatory requirements. Investigation powers have a key role to play in this. Their purpose is to discover the facts so that, if there has been misconduct, appropriate prosecution or regulatory action can be taken. The value of the existing powers is demonstrated by the results obtained. In the last two years, for example, following investigations under the Companies Act, criminal proceedings were brought in 28 cases involving the management of 47 companies and leading to penalties ranging from fines to, in one instance, imprisonment for 15 years. In addition, 61 companies were wound up in the public interest and nine people were disqualified from acting as directors. In the relatively short time that the Financial Services Act investigation powers have been in force, two people have been convicted of insider dealing as a direct result of investigations by inspectors, and legal proceedings are in train in two further cases.

These results demonstrate the contribution which the investigation powers make to the detection of malpractice. But, of course, not all investigations reveal malpractice. Their purpose is to find out the facts so that decisions can be taken on whether further action is needed. None of the investigation powers can be used unless there is a good reason. Some of the powers have higher thresholds. There is no question of the Secretary of State having the power to undertake "witch hunts", as has been suggested. But when in my judgment the statutory criteria are met, the Department will continue to use the powers when circumstances make it appropriate to do so. In exercising my discretion, we shall apply the same broad standards as our predecessors have done.

My Department has recently completed a review of existing investigation powers and procedures with a view to ensuring that investigations are undertaken as effectively and quickly as is compatible with a thorough and fair inquiry.

The review concluded that in general the present range of powers matched the different purposes and circumstances of investigation required in the United Kingdom, but that there was a need for more scope and flexibility in the way they could be used and for clarification of some of the provisions to improve efficiency.

Accordingly, it is intended to introduce the proposed changes to the law at the next convenient opportunity:—

(i) enabling the general powers of company investigation under Section 432 of the Companies Act also to be used in certain cases (broadly suspected fraud, misfeasance or misconduct) when the prime purpose is to consider the case for prosecution or regulatory action and there is no intention to publish a report;

(ii) strengthening various powers, including extending the existing powers to seek a search warrant for relevant books and papers and (subject to the Secretary of State's approval) to obtain information about relevant bank accounts, and tidying up the provisions on freezing share dealings;

(iii) extending the existing powers to recover the cost of investigations from persons who are convicted on a prosecution instituted as a result of an investigation;

(iv) enabling the Secretary of State to appoint outsiders to undertake inquiries under Section 447 of the Companies Act;

(v) simplifying the exchange of information between DTI investigators involved in different cases;

(vi) enabling the Secretary of State to terminate insider dealing investigations when no further purpose would be served by continuing and to terminate Companies Act inspections when it is more appropriate for further action to be handled by the serious fraud office or, in Scotland, through the Lord Advocate.

The review also concluded that, because of growing international links in corporate activity, and to help improve mutual co-operation with other countries, it would be helpful if the United Kingdom could do more than at present to assist overseas regulators. We are therefore also considering whether to introduce provisions for the Secretary of State to exercise powers to assist overseas regulatory authorities in some situations in which he cannot at present, when he is satisfied there is good reason to do so. We will bring forward proposals in due course if we do decide to proceed.

Additionally, steps will be taken to ensure more guidance and support for outside inspectors, closer working between DTI staff and outside inspectors and more use of criminal lawyers in investigation work.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has also reviewed the practice on announcing investigations. In the case of major investigations with a wider public interest, mounted under sections 432 and 442 of the Companies Act, that normally lead to a published report, it is clearly right to announce these when they are set up. This is existing practice as regards investigations into public companies, and I propose to extend it to such investigations into private companies. Inquiries under section 447 are much more limited in scope and are intended only to look at the books and papers of a company and seek explanations of them. It has never been the practice to announce these and the Department is satisfied that this should continue to be the case. Public announcement would undermine the effectiveness of the inquiries and would unduly damage the business of the companies concerned. We would consider confirming the existence of such an inquiry only if it had already been announced by the company concerned and no further prejudicial consequence was involved in such confirmation. The same applies to inquiries under section 105 of the Financial Services Act.

Insider dealing investigations under section 177 of the Financial Services Act involve independent inspectors, but the reports are not published. The purpose is to ascertain whether there has been a contravention of the Company Securities (Insider Dealing) Act 1985 and in appropriate cases the investigation may lead to prosecution. We have decided that, in the main, the interests of efficiency and justice are best served by not normally announcing or confirming these investigations. However, the Department will consider making an announcement if it is in the public interest, for example, if public officials are thought to be involved or if there has already been publicity for an investigation and we judge that it would be less damaging to the individuals or organisations concerned and appropriate in the circumstances if I were to acknowledge the existence of an investigation.

Finally, the Department has reviewed the resources available within my Department for investigation and related work. Resources have been considerably increased over recent years and the results are now beginning to be seen as staff gain experience. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry has concluded that a further increase in resources devoted to this work is needed in order to speed up the handling of the cases. He has also decided that to improve co-ordination, key enforcement activities of the Department should be brought together in one division. These functions include decisions on cases where it is appropriate to undertake investigations under the powers in the Companies and Financial Services Acts; carrying out investigations under section 447 of the Companies Act; liaison with outside inspectors; determination of appropriate action when reports are received; and the prosecution of offences for which the Department has particular responsibility, including insider dealing and other offences under the companies legislation, and insolvency offences.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy-efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Butcher: My Department has set a target reduction of 5 per cent. in energy usage for 1988-89; the target for electricity usage for lighting is 7 per cent. Investment in energy-efficiency measures, including the introduction of energy-efficient lighting equipment, will amount to £228,000 in 1988-89.

TRANSPORT

Motorway Network

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to extend the motorway network.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are continuing to develop the motorway network to meet both present and future traffic needs. We have 60 miles of new motorway and motorway improvements currently under construction. We plan to start work on a further 150 miles over the next five years.

Traffic Growth

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what his Department's estimates are for traffic growth in 1990, 1995 and 2000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's estimates of traffic growth between 1987 and the dates requested are as follows:

	Low growth per cent.	High growth per cent.
1987-1990	4	8
1987-2000	12	28

The estimates are presented as a range to reflect uncertainty about factors underlying traffic growth, such as GDP and fuel prices. They are based on the forecasts given in "National Road Traffic Forecasts, 1984", issued by the Department in March, 1985.

The Department's forecasts are of long-term growth, and cannot sensibly be used to forecast annual growth rates in specific future years.

1987 has been used as a base year because that is the latest year for which observed national traffic data are available. It is normal practice to base forecasts on the latest available traffic data, so that they take account of all past trends.

Road Improvements

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how he plans to ensure that plans for road improvements keep pace with traffic growths up to the year 2000.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are continuing to develop the trunk road network. We have a large new construction and improvement programme worth some £5 billion. It is regularly reviewed. Schemes are added as the need is identified.

Humberside Airport

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the plans of the Civil Aviation Authority to carry out a formal investigation, with a view to prosecution of officials of Humberside airport and on the response to such plans from the general manager of the airport: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We understand that the Civil Aviation Authority has no plans for investigation or prosecution of Humberside airport officials.

Motor Cycles (Leg Protectors)

Mr. Latham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the comments which he has received from individual motor cyclists and from the British Motorcyclists Federation, regarding his proposals for leg protectors; and what response he has made.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We welcome the stimulus to research by motor cycle manufacturers into the serious problem of leg injuries that has resulted from the widespread public debate about suitable protector design. Over 13,000 motor cyclists a year receive in-patient hospital treatment following road accidents, most of these accidents occur at low speeds—under 30mph. Over 60 per cent. of the serious injuries they suffered were to their legs, often leading to permanent disability. We circulated a draft specification for leg protectors to interested organisations for comments last July. This has generated a great deal of correspondence, including co-ordinated letter-writing campaigns. Unfortunately, some of the criticism was ill-informed.

We propose to work closely with manufacturers and other expert bodies over the next year in developing solutions to the leg injury problem. A letter has gone to the organisations consulted last July outlining how the research is to be carried forward over the next 12 months and making it clear that they will be included in consultation on the fruits of this co-operative effort next summer. Copies are available in the Library.

The Department will wish to be thoroughly assured of the safety benefits of any specification, whether the proposal that emerges is recommended as a requirement for all new vehicles, or might be prescribed as a safety standard for manufacturers to use when offering leg protectors as an option to their customers.

Plutonium

Mr. Darling: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Carmarthen (Mr. Williams) 8 March, Official Report, Columns 27-28, what is the maximum velocity of impact that flasks carrying plutonium are expected to withstand under the most stringent current international standards.

Mr. David Mitchell: The International Atomic Energy Agency regulations require flasks to withstand a free drop of 9 m with a terminal velocity of 30 mph, on to any unyielding target. This is equivalent to an impact of about 65 mph on to hard rock or 75 mph on to concrete. The IAEA is currently reviewing these standards in relation to the transport of plutonium by air. In the meantime, British Nuclear Fuels plc is designing a flask to meet the United States regulatory criteria which involve an impact velocity of 288 mph.

Transport Infrastructure Projects

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what guidelines on the scope of possible projects he has given to private sector companies considering making proposals for private sector-sponsored transport infrastructure projects; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has written to a number of prominent firms in the finance and construction industries inviting their ideas in general terms on the possibilities for private sector infrastructure projects. He has asked them to put forward ideas for building and operating infrastructure in ways which are more cost-effective than current methods and preferably to look for novel concepts which will complement existing and planned public sector provision. The firms have also been provided with a copy of the paper which the Government put to the civil engineering EDC clarifying the Ryrie rules.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what specific proposals from private sector companies for private sector sponsored transport infrastucture projects he has received since 1 January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of ideas on privately funded infrastructure projects this year including suggestions for:

—a road tunnel under the Thames
—a second tier on the M25
—a rail link to the Channel tunnel
—improvements to the public transport surface access to Heathrow airport
—a light rapid transit system for Avon.

A large number of more general ideas have also been put forward recently, largely in response to my right hon. Friend's letter of March 28 to firms in the finance and construction industries inviting their views on privately financed transport infrastructure projects.

London Underground

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on how many occasions in each of the past five years people have fallen in front of London Underground trains.

Mr. David Mitchell: The table shows how many incidents have been reported where people have fallen under trains on all the lines of London Underground Limited during the last four years. Figures for 1983 are not readily available.

	1984			1985			1986			1987
	Fatal	Major	Minor	Fatal	Major	Minor	Fatal	Major	Minor	Fatal	Major	Minor
Trespassers	19	10	5	19	9	5	15	9	—	20	1	4
Suicides	22	3	—	24	10	1	33	6	—	20	10	1
Others	1	—	—	4	—	—	3	4	—	1	—	[1]76
Totals	42	13	5	47	19	6	51	19	—	41	11	81

[1] A new reporting order was introduced from 1 January 1987 which has resulted in more comprehensive reporting of minor injuries.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assurances he has received from British Rail as to whether the planned fleet of high speed passenger trains operating through the Channel tunnel will be able to use existing British Rail lines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is an essential in the specification for these trains that they must be able to operate satisfactorily on existing electrified British Rail lines.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Cereals

Sir Richard Body: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the estimated increase or decrease in production in percentage terms of (a) wheat, (b) barley and (c) maize in 1988 by comparison with 1987 (i) in the United Kingdom and (ii) in the EEC as a whole.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Given the significance of the weather for cereal yields, it is not possible to produce a reliable forecast of United Kingdom cereal production before the harvest. However, the latest forecasts of Community production of cereals in 1988 produced by the European statistical office show the following changes when compared with the provisional production figures for 1987:

	Percentage change
Common Wheat	7·7
Durum Wheat	−3·1
Barley	1·0
Maize	5·4
Other Cereals	0·6

Forestry Commission

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if all Forestry Commission district offices in England have been circulated with a copy of the statement made by the Secretary of State for the Environment on behalf of their two Ministries on 16 March and whether the Forestry Commission has issued instructions to all districts on the implementation of the guidelines contained in that statement.

Mr. MacGregor: I confirm that a copy of the statement was sent to all Forestry Commission forest district offices in England on 16 March. Further instructions to the forest districts must await the guidance letter which I promised in the statement and which is in preparation. In the meantime, the commission is delaying decisions on grant applications likely to be affected by the new policy.

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has any evidence of morbidity in babies resulting from the drinking of milk from animals treated with bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Department has no such evidence.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the trials being carried out at the AFRC Institute for grassland and animal production on bovine somatotropin will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Field trials on bovine somatotropin (and all other medicinal products) must be conducted under the authority of an animal test certificate issued under the Medicines Act 1968. Such certificates are granted for two years but are normally renewable. I cannot, at this stage, therefore, give a completion date.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is yet in a position to draw up guidelines for the commercial administration of bovine somatotropin, including monitoring of performance and health.

Mr. Donald Thompson: We are not yet in a position to draw up such guidelines.

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Donald Thompson: My Ministry charges fees for subject access to personal records, only for requests from members of the public, not from employees. To date, no requests for access have been received from members of the public and, therefore, no revenue has been received.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Donald Thompson: To date, my Ministry has received 37 applications for subject access to personal data. The applications relate to a total of 121 registrations under the Act and all have been from Ministry employees.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many of the badgers taken in each parish for 1986 and 1987, respectively, were subsequently found to be carrying tuberculosis.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The number of badgers found to be positive for bovine tuberculosis on post mortem are shown in the following table.

EMPLOYMENT

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action he is taking to locate the Docklands liaison group in the Docklands.

Mr. Nicholls: There are no plans to re-locate the London docklands liaison group in the area covered by the London Docklands Development Corporation.

A decision has been taken to retain the London docklands liaison group in the current location (Aldgate) because of its close proximity to the LDDC area and the operational advantages of being co-located with MSC's east London area office.

Training Schemes

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the main differences between the new job training scheme and the proposed new adult training programme.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training combines the best features of a number of the existing programmes it will replace, including the community programme and the new job training scheme. A major new feature will be the training agent, who will carry out an objective initial assessment for each entrant and draw up a personal action plan, agreed with each individual, which will form the basis of their training programme. Employment training will be more flexible than new JTS, enabling participants to progress through a wide range of training options. These will include project-based training, enterprise training, placements with employers and an entitlement to at least 40 per cent. off-the-job training. The emphasis will be on quality and wherever possible, training will lead to a recognised vocational qualification, or a credit towards one.

Community Programme

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what would the community enterprise programme wage be now had it been increased in line with inflation since its inception.

Mr. Nicholls: The maximum average wage payable to adult employees on the community enterprise programme was £83 per week at its inception in April 1981. This would have risen to £116·60 per week if the programme still existed and the wage had risen in line with inflation.

The community enterprise programme was superseded by the community programme in October 1982.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether community programme workers joining after 1 March and eligible to transfer to the new adult employment training scheme in September will incur benefit penalties if they leave at the end of their period of six months on wages.

Mr. Nicholls: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Worsley (Mr. Lewis) on 24 March 1988, at column 164.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment why the MSC has withdrawn funding and support for the training programme for black community programme managers in Birmingham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: A training course to help black people to set up as independent sponsors of projects under the community programme commenced on 10 August 1987. The course is jointly sponsored by the MSC, Handsworth task force and the city of Birmingham local authority. The MSC has not withdrawn funding. The course reached its scheduled completion date on 6 May 1988.

The MSC is arranging for the trainees involved in this course to be employed by community programme sponsors.

Blind Persons (Reader Service)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people have used the personal reader service for the blind in each year since its introduction.

Mr. Nicholls: The personal reader service for the blind was introduced into YTS in April 1986. in 1986-87, four trainees used the service, and in 1987-88 a further three. The service was introduced into new JTS in November 1987: no one on that scheme has used the service so far.

Restart Programme

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures of the cost of the restart programme for the financial years 1986-87 and 1987-88, and an estimate of the cost of the programme for 1988-89; and what criteria and evaluative techniques are used to measure the success of the programme.

Mr. Lee: The main aim of the restart counselling programme is to contact all long-term unemployed people and to offer them positive help back to work.

The main measures of success of the programme are the number of long-term unemployed people contacted, the number interviewed, and the percentage of those interviewed who are offered positive help. This information is collected monthly.

Between July 1986 and March 1988, some 4·4 million people were contacted, 3·5 million interviewed and 89 per cent. of those offered positive help.

The costs of the counselling programme are as follows:

1986-87	£22 million.
1987-88	£40 million (estimated outturn).
1988-89	£41 million (estimate).

Labour Statistics

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide monthly figures from June 1986 to the most recent date for which information is available for (a) the number of employees in employment for each of the standard regions, (b) the unemployment figures by claimant count for each of the standard regions, (c) an estimation of how much of the reduction in unemployment by claimant count is a result of (i) people moving into full-time work, (ii) people moving into part-time work, (iii) community programmes and other adult schemes, (iv) people being removed from the claimant count by being offered other state benefits, (v) restart interviews leading to people removing themselves from the claimant count without work or training destination and (vii) people leaving the register as a result of claims investigations.

Mr. Lee: Following is the available information. Table A gives the number of employees in employment, which is available only quarterly, for each of the standard regions in the United Kingdom from June 1986 to the latest available date. Table B similarly shows seasonally adjusted adult unemployment monthly from June 1986.

The information requested in part (c) is not available. It is impossible to make reliable estimates of the effect on the changes in the unemployment count of the various potential influences. During the period of strong economic growth and an improving jobs market, such as we are currently experiencing, many more people are encouraged to look for work. Some of the jobs were taken by people who were not previously unemployed claimants.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he is taking to publicise successful prosecutions for unemployment benefit fraud in each region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: While my Department encourages publicity for large-scale fraud drives, we generally do not actively seek publicity for individual successful prosecutions.

Training Schemes

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the benefit position of adult claimants who leave the proposed new employment training scheme for adults before the end of their agreed training programme, in relation to their previous level of benefit; and in what circumstances an adult claimant will face benefit penalties for either refusing to join, or leaving a place early, in the proposed employment training scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: People who leave employment training early will be entitled to claim unemployment benefit or income support, provided that they meet the statutory conditions for entitlement to these benefits. The level of benefit of those who have previously received these benefits may alter if their circumstances have changed while on the programme. Refusal of a place on employment training or leaving the programme early will not in themselves be grounds for refusal of benefit.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Pharmaceutical Services

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will test the effectiveness of the pharmaceutical services in National Health Service hospitals by putting them out to tender.

Mr. Newton: We encourage health authorities to consider the possibilities for securing greater cost-effectiveness in the provision of all NHS services. Going out to tender for a particular service is one such possibility, but we have no central initiative in mind to extend the range of services subject to mandatory tender action.

Southern Derbyshire District Health Authority

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much money Southern Derbyshire district health authority has spent in local authority rates in each year from 1978-79 to the present.

Mr. Newton: Following is information derived from the annual accounts of the Southern Derbyshire health authority since its establishment on 1 April 1982:

Total expenditure on contributions in lieu of rates

1982-83	1,096
1983-84	1,204
1984-85	1,388
1985-86	1,416
1986-87[1]	1,669

[1] latest available.

Note:
Prior to 1 April 1982 the district health authority's predecessor health district formed part of the Derbyshire area health authority and district based figures were not collected centrally.

Rates

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 10 district authorities in England with the highest percentage rate rises in the current year; and which of these authorities fall within the present criteria for possible rate capping.

Mr. Newton: Information on health authorities expenditure on contributions in lieu of rates is not collected in-year but is recorded in their annual accounts. Health authorities' annual accounts for the financial year 1987-88 are not due for submission to the Department until the end of June 1988 and information for that year will be available in the autumn.

Acute Medical Care

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of the health budget is allocated to acute medical care.

Mr. Newton: Estimated gross expenditure on acute hospital services represented 45 per cent. of total spending on the hospital and community health services for 1985-86.

Nurse Contact Rate

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the district nurse contact rate for the over 65s in Trafford, Sheffield, Manchester City, West Lambeth and Stockport health authorities.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the table. Information is collected centrally on the number of persons treated by district nurses but not on the total number of treatments given.

Number of persons and percentage of population, aged 65 and over, treated by district nurses during 1986

District health authority	Number of persons treated	Percentage of population treated
Trafford	7,744	23·4
Sheffield	16,066	17·5
Manchester Central	2,315	13·6
West Lambeth	1,426	6·1
Stockport	8,942	20·9

Disabled Persons (Rayner Scrutiny)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the results of the Rayner scrutiny on the supply and use of home equipment issued to temporarily or permanently disabled people in the community, commissioned by his Department in 1986.

Mr. Newton: This is currently under consideration.

Consultant Urologists

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many consultant urologists are working in each health authority in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: Figures are not available for all district health authorities. Information about medical staff is collected by employing authorities, which, for consultants, means regional health authorities, district health authorities designated for teaching purposes, and special health authorities for the London postgraduate teaching hospitals in England, and district health authorities in Wales. Such information as is available is set out in the table.

Körner Information Forms

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is monitoring the time taken in filling out Körner information forms by physiotherapists and occupational therapists in (a) the Nottingham district health authority and (b) generally; and if he will make a statement on the cost effectiveness of such information gathering.

Mr. Newton: The Department is not monitoring the time taken to collect Körner information: this is a matter for authorities which are individually responsible for implementing Körner.

A variety of systems are being used to collect data about physiotherapy and occupational therapy. The aim of collecting this and other information is to assist management and professional staff in ensuring that resources are effectively used. The cost-effectiveness of the work in the short-term will therefore depend on what it shows, and what is done with it.

Electorates

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 25 largest parliamentary constituencies by electorate, with their electorates; and what is the average constituency electorate on the current register.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Parliamentary constituencies	Electors on the 1988 Register
Milton Keynes	103,210

Social Security Fraud

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to publicise successful prosecutions for social security fraud in each region; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The Department has not normally sought publicity for successful prosecutions. Where inquiries are made by members of the press following their attendance at court, regional information officers assist on matters of fact.

Data Protection

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what revenue has been received by his Department since 11 November 1987 from the payment of fees for subject access to personal records, pursuant to the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984.

Mr. Portillo: None. The Department does not charge a fee.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications under the provisions of the Data Protection Act 1984 for subject access to personal records held by his Department he has received since 11 November 1987.

Mr. Portillo: At the close of business on Friday 6 May 1988, 364 applications had been received.

Consultants (Suspected Fraud)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of suspected fraudulent claims by hospital consultants were investigated during 1987; in how many cases fraud was discovered; how much money was involved; and what further action is being taken to prevent further instances.

Mr. Newton: This information is not collected centrally. It is the responsibility of health authorities to carry out any necessary checks on claims submitted by all NHS employees, including consultants.

NHS Capital Schemes

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list by regional health authority and special health authority all capital schemes costing over £1 million which are currently in progress; and if he will give the estimated date of completion.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is included in the table.

National Insurance Liability

Mr. Conway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he is taking to prevent the avoidance of national insurance contribution liability through the payment of earnings in gilt.

Mr. Portillo: There has been an increase in the practice of paying part of remuneration in gilts to directors and other highly paid personnel. This is a device which avoids national insurance contribution liability. I have therefore today laid before the House regulations (The Social Security (Contributions) Amendment (No. 3) Regulations 1988) withdrawing the exemption from national insurance contributions which currently applies to gilts and other debt instruments. The regulations will have effect from tomorrow.

Further action will be taken if it appears that other securities are being used to avoid national insurance contribution liability.

Health Authorities (Staff)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for England and for each regional health authority for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent qualified midwives working (a) in hospital maternity units, (b) in special care baby units, (c) in education and (d) as community midwives;

(2) if he will list for England for each regional health authority for each year since 1981 the number of whole-time equivalent nurses working in (a) hospital maternity units and (b) special baby care units.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The information requested is given in the tables.

District Health Authorities (Costs)

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take in the light of the significant variations between different district health authorities in the percentage of their total expenditure taken up by administrative and clerical costs; to what factors he attributes these variations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 29 April 1988]: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Dover (Mr. Shaw) on 3 May at columns 490-98 which gave individual regional health authority and district health authority administrative and clerical staff figures together with cost and cost relative to population.

Costs, particularly the costs relative to population for individual districts, can be influenced by a number of factors: (a) the presence or absence of regional services such as blood transfusion or ambulance services and regional specialties; (b) people crossing district boundaries for treatment and sub-regional resource allocations reflecting the pattern of service provision locally; (c) the fact that the population figures used are for resident population and make no allowances for differences in morbidity and age-sex structure of particular populations; (d) the payment of London weighting allowance to staff employed in relevant authorities within the four Thames regions.

Baby Intensive Care Units (Leeds)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many special and intensive care units for babies have had (a) the number of beds reduced and (b) wards closed, in the Leeds Western health authority for each of the past five years;

(2) what is the total number of places in special and intensive care units for babies in the Leeds Western health authority; and what was the corresponding figure for 1983.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 3 May 1988]: Leeds Western health authority is responsible for the provision of the health services indicated but I am advised that in 1983 there were 29 special care baby unit cots available at the Leeds maternity hospital and four neonatal intensive care cots at the general infirmary. These services transferred to the Clarendon wing at the general infirmary in 1983. Improved facilities and changes in medical practice have resulted in a different bed mix. There are currently 20 SCBU cots, six neonatal intensive care cots, and seven "transitional care beds" which are associated with more intensive nursing than would usually be required: a total, as in 1983, of 33. For further details the hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of Leeds Western health authority.

Statistical Bulletins

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a list of each of the statistical bulletins published by his Department, the title, date, number of copies printed, number of copies distributed free of charge to Government, National Health Service and other users, and the numbers sold so far and the price.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The information requested has been placed in the Library. The sales figures are the numbers sold up to the end of April 1988.

British Pensioners (Canada)

Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of his reply to the letter of 17 December 1987 from the Minister of Health and Welfare of Canada, the right hon. Jack Epp, regarding British pensioners resident in Canada; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The Canadian Minister of Health and Welfare, Mr. Jack Epp, wrote to the then Secretary of State for Social Services on 17 December 1986 about British pensioners resident in Canada. A reply was sent on his behalf by my noble Friend, the Baroness Trumpington, on 13 February 1987. I have arranged for a copy of this letter to be placed in the Library.

This letter refers to another reply from the noble Baroness to a letter from Mr. Brian Howe, the Australian Minister for Social Security, on the same issue. As the two are complementary I have arranged for a copy of that letter to be placed in the Library also.

Tinnitus

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount which has been allocated during the current financial year for research into the condition known as tinnitus by his Department.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 6 May 1988]: I understand that the Medical Research Council, the main Government agency responsible for the promotion of medical and related biological research, and which receives its grant-in-aid from the Department of Education and Science, is funding some research into this condition and spent some £131,000 in 1986-87, the latest year for which information is available. Details are available in the MRC handbook, a copy of which is in the Library.

The Department is not currently funding any research into tinnitus and has not allocated funds for such research in 1988-89.

Taxes and Benefits

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his latest estimate of the numbers of working single people and of earners with dependent families who will have marginal rates of tax and benefit withdrawal in excess of 70 per cent. in 1988-89; and what will be the combined total number of people in that situation, including earners and their dependants.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 25 March 1988, c. 244-46]: On the basis of the figures set out in my previous reply the total numbers attached to tax units, where the head might face a combined marginal rate of tax payment and benefit withdrawal in excess of 70 per cent., is estimated to be no more than 2 million.

Senior Doctors

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list for each regional health authority the number of senior doctors per 100,000 in-patients treated for each year since 1979 to the latest available date.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 21 April 1988, c. 548-50]: I regret that some of the information provided was incorrect. The correct information is set out in the table.

the medical specialties.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Mentally Handicapped People (Training)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by unit of management the number of training places for mentally handicapped and mentally ill patients under the four health and social sevices boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Training under the health and social services boards for mentally handicapped and mentally ill patients comprises work-orientated activities, often linked to social skills programmes, conducted in specialist statutory facilities under the supervision of board staff. For the mentally handicapped, training places are provided in workshops, adult training centres and social education centres in the community and in day care units in mental handicap hospitals. For the mentally ill training is provided in industrial therapy units attached to the psychiatric hospitals. The table relates only to training provided by the statutory sector. The places shown include not only those specifically provided for the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped, but those in multi-client workshops in the community which are taken up by the mentally ill. The latest date for which central statistics are held on available training is 31 December 1986.

In regard to the mentally ill client group living in the community a very considerable amount of training is already provided, and more is planned by Industrial Therapy Organisation Ltd., a voluntary body supported by both regional and local statutory funding.

The four health and social services boards are committed to a continuing assessment of the needs for training of the mentally ill and the mentally handicapped, particularly in the context of the increasing emphasis on helping these two client groups to lead as independent and fulfilling lives as possible within the community.

Maintained Schools (Insurance Costs)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if grant provision to maintained schools allows for insurance costs for these properties.

Dr. Mawhinney: Yes.

Museums

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present valuation of (a) property and (b) exhibits at the Ulster museum, Stranmillis, Belfast, and the Ulster Folk and Transport museum at Cultra.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what assessment he has made of the implications for employment levels at museums in Northern Ireland of current proposals to privatise services there; if he will defer those proposals; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what assessment he has made of the implications of privatising services at museums in Northern Ireland for the security of property and exhibits, with particular reference to the risk of bogus firms with paramilitary connections seeking to tender for contracts; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what is the estimated value of annual savings to be made in public expenditure at (a) the Ulster museum, Stranmillis, and (b) the Ulster Folk and Transport museum, Cultra, from proposals to contract out catering, cleaning and security work.

Dr. Mawhinney: The assessment of the implications for employment levels, the security of property and exhibits and the value of savings likely to be achieved are an integral part of an exercise which I have asked the trustees to undertake. The intention is that they should evaluate the efficiency and cost-effectiveness of contracting-out to competitive tender their cleaning, catering, security and warding services and to submit proposals.

Potatoes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland plans to introduce a potato stock feed scheme in the immediate future.

Mr. Viggers: No.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what criteria are required by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland for the implementation of a potato stock feed scheme in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: Under an agreement with the Ulster Farmers Union, the Government are obliged to use their best endeavours to ensure that the Northern Ireland market price over the season as a whole does not finish lower than the target price for potatoes for human consumption. For the 1987 crop the target price for ware potatoes is £46 per tonne.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the extent of the surplus of potatoes on the Northern Ireland potato market during the period September 1987 and March 1988.

Mr. Viggers: This information is not available, but any surplus would not appear to be substantial since average growers' prices remain above the 1987-88 target price.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what change there has been in the quantities of potatoes being exported from Northern Ireland since September 1987; what quantities were exported between September 1987 and March 1988; and what were the comparable figures for the two previous 12-month periods.

Mr. Viggers: The information requested, which relates to exports of seed and ware potatoes from Northern Ireland to Great Britain and foreign destinations, is as follows:

	'000 tonnes
September 1987 to March 1988 (inclusive)	90
September 1986 to March 1987 (inclusive)	88
September 1985 to March 1986 (inclusive)	73

Labour Statistics

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement, giving figures for the last convenient period, of the fall in unemployment and provision of new jobs in the Province.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 5 May 1988]: Trends in unemployment in Northern Ireland over the last year have been very encouraging. Seasonally adjusted unemployment (excluding school leavers) decreased by 9,000 between March 1987 and March 1988 and has fallen in all but two of the past 17 months. This has been matched by improved results from the industrial development agencies. Between them the Industrial Development Board and the Local Enterprise Development Unit promoted 9,347 new jobs during the year ended 31 March 1988, compared to 8,431 in the previous year.

GCSE

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give the cost of collection of GCSE assessments by Securicor during the week ended 29 April; whether the written papers will be transported by the postal system; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 9 May 1988]: These matters are the responsibility of the various examining bodies.

Artificial Insemination Service

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications were submitted in response to the invitation to acquire the artificial insemination service; whether the successful applicant submitted the higher offer; what other factors and criteria were considerations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Viggers [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The Department of Agriculture sought applications from organisations which wished to be considered for the grant of the licence to provide an AI service for cattle producers in Northern Ireland and no acquisition as such was involved. This was in accordance with a decision that the Department should disengage from provision of the AI service at 30 September 1988. Organisations with interest and potential capability were invited by public advertisement to apply for the licence. Acquisition of the Department's assets was not a requirement for grant of the licence.

Four applications were received. In assessing the applications, the main factors and criteria were commitment to the cattle production sector, financial resources, operational proposals, managerial resources, breeding policy and semen procurement provisions. The application by AI Services (NI) Society Ltd. was deemed the most suitable.

SCOTLAND

Bathing Waters

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on the quality and condition of bathing waters around the coast of Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Dumfries (Sir H. Munro) on 5 May, column 536.

Teachers (Pay)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many Scottish teachers received no increase in their salaries following the recent pay award to Scottish teachers, as a result of the existing pay structure within the teaching profession in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not held centraliy.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Wilhelm Mohnke

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Attorney-General if the Lord Chancellor will make it his policy to arrange for the immediate release of all public records relating to Wilhelm Mohnke and the Wormhoudt massacre.

The Attorney-General: Public records relating to Wilhelm Mohnke and the Wormhoudt massacre are subject to the provisions of the Public Records Act 1958. The Act provides for certain records over 30 years old to be retained by Departments, for administrative or other reasons, under section 5(1), in accordance with the criteria set out in paragraphs 26-27 of the White Paper "Modern Public Records", (Cmnd. 8531, March 1982). The Lord Chancellor's policy is to act in accordance with these. A file (TS26/206) containing reports of the incident is available for public inspection in the Public Records Office. A number of other files relating inter alia to this incident continue to be held by the Ministry of Defence where their contents are being examined in the light of the relevant statutory provisions and criteria to which I have referred.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Attorney-General if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the City of London police on progress in the inquiry on behalf of the Crown Prosecution Service into alleged contempt between the two principal Crown witnesses during the appeal of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions expects to receive a report in the near future.

PRIME MINISTER

Bristol Channel (Dumping)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister if she will instruct those Ministers who authorise dumping of industrial, nuclear, sewage or any other waste into the Bristol channel, and all other Ministers with supervisory or investigatory powers, to co-ordinate an investigation into the number of permits issued and the efficiency of control on volume or toxicity of material dumped, together with an estimate of any illegal pollution by dumping without licence, including ships washing out their tanks in mid-channel.

The Prime Minister: Departments with responsibilities in this field already co-ordinate their activities and monitor jointly the water quality in the Bristol channel. Any information concerning the unlicensed disposal of waste is dealt with by the appropriate Department; for ships washing out their tanks this is the Department of Transport.

"Reducing the Risk of Legal Challenge"

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will place in the Library a copy of the memorandum, "Reducing the Risk of Legal Challenge", which accompanied the document entitled "Judge over your Shoulder".

The Prime Minister: I am advised the memorandum was produced separately from the other document to which the hon. Member refers. I am placing a copy in the Library.

Government Legal Services (Inquiry)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if she will include within the remit of Sir Robert Andrew's inquiry into the Government's legal services, consideration of which increasing demands have been placed on the public legal services by Government policies, their legal case against Peter Wright; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I have no plans to alter the terms of reference of Sir Robert Andrew's review of Government legal services which were set out in the reply to the hon. Member by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 20 January 1988, Official Report, column 955.

Professor Brian Griffiths

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of the visit of Professor Brian Griffiths to Scotland in April 1988 to discuss school matters.

The Prime Minister: The estimated cost of the visit was £250.

Written Answers (Costs)

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Prime Minister what was the cost of the written answer to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) on Government achievements, Official Report, 6 May, columns 628-44.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister what is the cost to public funds connected with her reply to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) on 6 May, Official Report, columns 628-44, including the costs of printing.

The Prime Minister: The reply was assembled from material provided by a wide range of Departments. The total cost of time of those who contributed, including secretarial staff, measured by salary, overheads, and other costs, including printing, is estimated at £3,900.

Government Policy Objectives

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list those policy objectives which Her Majesty's Government have failed to achieve since May 1979 in respect of the United Kingdom and also in respect of Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: The Government have secured, or are making progress towards securing all their main policy objectives.

Rowntree plc

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations she has received about the future of Rowntree plc; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster and Minister of Trade and Industry, Official Report 10 May 1988, columns 151-52. I have received a number of representations including from hon. Members.

Sir Jeffrey Sterling

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister when she last met Sir Jeffrey Sterling; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: Sir Jeffrey Sterling is special adviser to my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. I meet departmental special advisers from time to time.

P and O

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister on what dates officials in her office, the Cabinet Office or any Government Department have been involved in any way in property and planning negotiations between local authorities and P and O.

The Prime Minister: Officials would not normally be involved in negotiations between local authorities and any company about property and planning matters except in connection with disposal of Government land or Government grants in respect of development schemes. If the hon. Member has any specific matter in which he is interested, perhaps he would be good enough to make inquiries with the Ministers concerned.

Engagements

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 May.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 May.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 12 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Manufacturing Firms (Houghton and Washington)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, further to the answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 541, if he will provide a list of the 20 new manufacturing firms located in Houghton and Washington which have opened since January 1985 and their locations.

Mr. Atkins: The information referred to was collected under and is subject to the Statistics of Trade Act. This precludes providing details of individual companies.

Vetting Procedures

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will provide details of the vetting procedures applied to non-Civil Service staff employed by outside contractors who undertake security duties at research establishments of his Department.

Mr. Butcher: Non-Civil Service security guards are employed at one research establishment of this Department. They are vetted as to suitability and reliability by their employer, to a standard acceptable to the Department.

Research Establishments

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the departmental review of all the research establishments of his Department announced in the White Paper "DTI—the department for Enterprise" (Cm. 278) of January will be completed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I hope to announce the outcome of the review of the DTI's research establishments within the next few weeks.

Takeovers

Mr. Grylls: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his policy on exercising his powers under the Industry Act 1975 to prohibit a foreign takeover of a British company by a company headquartered in a country which places obstacles in the way of takeovers of their companies by foreign firms.

Mr. Butcher: The powers in part II of the Industry Act 1975 relate only to changes of control of important manufacturing undertakings. These powers have never been used. The Government consider that the powers under the Fair Trading Act 1973 are a more appropriate means of implementing mergers policy. In deciding whether to refer a merger to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under the merger provisions of this Act, one factor that may be relevant in some cases is the extent to which United Kingdom companies have reciprocal freedom to acquire companies based in the home country of the prospective acquiror. Each case must, however, be considered individually on its own merits.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission (References)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the number of references of cases to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission which have involved issues of reciprocity with other countries in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: So far as I am aware, the MMC has addressed the matter of reciprocity in only one report, Elders IXL Ltd and Allied-Lyons plc. In that case, the MMC concluded it was unlikely that any imbalance between Australian and British law would operate against the public interest.

Swiss Company Law and Practice

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what representations he has made to the Swiss Government on the lack of reciprocity in company law and practice.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have made no such representations.

Steel Industry

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what advice he has received from the EEC Commission about overcapacity in the steel industry; and what action will be taken about this advice.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 10 May 1988]: The European Commission has estimated that overcapacity in the European Coal and Steel Community steel industry amounts to some 30 million tonnes, of which around 20 million tonnes is accounted for by flat products and heavy sections. The Council of Industry Ministers agreed on 22 December 1987 that unless guaranteed undertakings to reduce this overcapacity were forthcoming by 10 June, ECSC production quotas would end on 30 June. For full details I refer my hon. Friend to the answer my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Northfield (Mr. King) on 12 January, Official Report, columns 215-17.

ENVIRONMENT

Bricklayers (British Library Site)

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the average weekly earnings of a bricklayer currently working on the British Library site.

Mr. Chope: The pay of bricklayers working on the British Library project is determined by the contractor, taking into account market conditions.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the availability of bricklayers for the British Library project.

Mr. Chope: The buoyancy of the construction market in London has led to keen competition for skilled bricklayers. I understand that the contractor keeps the numbers under constant review and adjusts them to meet programme targets.

Tyfoam

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what information he has as to the number of occasions on which the ICI product Tyfoam has been withdrawn from use by local authorities following complaints from tenants and residents;

(2) what information he has as to how many local authorities have used the ICI product Tyfoam in dealing with structural faults in municipal housing.

Mr. Trippier: This information is not available to the Department.

Micro-organisms (Genetic Engineering)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will press for the inception of international regulatory machinery to prevent the abuse of genetic engineering of micro-organisms, such as the release of organisms in developing countries without the approval of national authorities.

Mr. Moynihan: This subject is already under discussion internationally and the United Kingdom is playing a full and constructive part. Adequate guidance for countries wishing to control this area has already been published by the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development ("Recombinant DNA Safety Considerations"; OECD Paris 1986). No further action is currently contemplated by the Government.

Water Quality

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources are presently devoted to monitoring of water quality in Britain.

Mr. Moynihan: The main reponsibility for monitoring the quality of our inland and coastal waters in England and Wales lies with the regional water authorities. In all, about 1,000 staff are engaged in this area of work although many also undertake other duties. Questions about the monitoring undertaken in Scotland by the river purification authorities are matters for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Oxfordshire (Rateable Values)

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what he estimates the average increase in rateable values in Oxfordshire has been since the last revaluation.

Mr. Howard: Analysis of the returns made to the Inland Revenue about rent levels for non-domestic property has not yet been carried out. It is therefore too early to say what the average level of increase in rateable value in Oxfordshire will be.

Council House Sales

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list by region how many council tenants over the age of 70 years have (a) applied to buy and (b) bought their council homes for each year since 1979.

Mr. Waldegrave: Information is not collected on the age of tenants applying to buy or buying their council homes.

Crown Suppliers

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce detailed plans for the privatisation of the Crown Suppliers.

Mr. Chope: As soon as possible.

London Docklands (CPOs)

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of his decision letters concerning compulsory purchase orders made by the London Docklands development corporation since 1981.

Mr. Trippier: The decision letter related to the London Docklands (East Docklands) CPO 1985 was placed in the Library on 11 March 1988. I have arranged for copies of all other decision letters on the corporation's CPOs to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many draft compulsory purchase orders have been made by the London Docklands development corporation since 1981; and how many he has cofirmed.

Mr. Trippier: The corporation has made 34 compulsory purchase orders, all since 1985, of which to date I have confirmed six in whole or in part.

Rating Reform

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the clearing banks concerning their ability to cope with transactions expected under the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: My officials have met representatives of the Association for Payment Clearing Services (APACS) to discuss the implications of community charge collection for money transaction systems. Representatives of APACS will attend the next meeting of the implementation sub-group of the community charge working group, which comprises officials of the Department of the Environment, the Welsh Office, DHSS and the local authority associations, to discuss the practical issues arising from the introduction of the community charge.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to ensure that persons required to complete the poll tax registration form are given 21 days in which to do so.

Mr. Howard: Regulations will provide that persons requested to supply information to community charge registration officers must do so within 21 days of the request.

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average rate paid by a domestic ratepayer in each English district in 1988-89, together with his estimate as to the community charge per payer in 1988-89 had the proposed system been in operation.

Mr. Howard [holding answer 10 May 1988]: I hope to be able to publish these figures shortly.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 389, whether he will grant additional capital allocations to those authorities which need to lease office accommodation for staff for poll tax, in addition to the £25 million already allocated, in the event of such leases counting as prescribed expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 May 1988]: I shall consider what additional capital allocations may be appropriate in the light of the findings from the Price Waterhouse report on the cost of the community charge, when I receive it.

Salisbury Plain

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is being taken by his Department to protect sites of antiquity and archaeological interest on Salisbury plain under Ministry of Defence control.

Mr. Moynihan: Land in the Salisbury plain training area is managed by the Property Services Agency (defence land agent) on behalf of the Ministry of Defence. In relation to archaeological remains, the agency acts in accordance with a scheme of management agreed between this Department and the MoD following the report of the Salisbury plain training area archaeological working party (1984-85), with advice from the Salisbury plain training area archaeological consultative committee, comprising representatives of the Army, the Ministry of Defence and the Property Services Agency. The committee is next meeting on 18 May.

Empty Local Authority Properties

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has considered bringing forward legislation to compel local authorities to sell to housing associations properties which have remained empty for more than six months without good cause; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Following discussions during the Committee stage of the Housing Bill, we are considering what practical measures might be introduced to reduce the number of empty local authority properties. My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning hopes to make a statement on Report.

Southend United FC

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he issued a notice to Southend borough council about the development of a new ground for Southend United football club in Sutton road; what was the purpose of the notice; when he expects the council will be enabled to consider the planning application; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: On 31 March 1988 the Secretary of State directed Southend-on-Sea borough council to refer to him the application for a new stadium for Southend United because, for the reasons given in the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State's letter to my hon. Friend of 30 March, he considered it was one that he, rather than the council, should decide. A local inquiry is being arranged to enable all interested parties to express their views, after which the Secretary of State will decide whether or not to grant planning permission. Since an inquiry is to be held, I am unable to comment on the merits of the proposal.

Local Authorities (Finance)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 3 May, Official Report, column 390, what information on the investing by local authorities of balances and so on in companies is available to him (a) from the quarterly borrowing and lending inquiry, (b) from the quarterly return of rates, interest receipts and payments, wages and salaries and (c) CIPFA capital expenditure and debt-financing statistics; and if he will make a statement on recent trends in this area of local authority activity.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 11 May 1988]: Information on the level of investment by local authorities in companies is not available from the returns specified, apart from the level of short-term investments of less than 12 months in industrial and commercial companies, which is collected on the quarterly borrowing and lending inquiry. The level of such investment was £50 million at 31 March 1988.

Housing Defects

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has settled the distribution to individual councils of the £20 million housing investment programme resources for 1988-89 set aside for local authorities facing particular difficulties with their obligations under the housing defects legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: We have decided to allocate the £20 million of available resources to 75 local authorities, which are today being notified individually by my Department's regional controllors. The authorities receiving such allocations are as follows:

NORTHERN IRELAND

Maryfields (Public Buildings)

Mr. John D. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when a flag was last flown on the flag pole at the public buildings, known as Maryfields, near Belfast; which flag it was; and what are the instructions for flying the Union flag at these premises.

Mr. Stanley: The last flag flown at Maryfield was the Union flag, on 21 August 1985. Since the secretariat of the Intergovernmental Conference has been housed in the building, the policy has been to fly no flags there.

Arts, Museums and Libraries

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what proportion of total central Government spending on Northern Ireland is represented by his Department's total expenditure on arts, museums and libraries in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Dr. Mawhinney: 0·6 per cent. each year.

Arts Council

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what grants were made by his Department to the Arts Council of Northern Ireland for 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Dr. Mawhinney: £3·682 million in the 1987-88 financial year. Its allocated budget for 1988-89 is £3·7 million.

Business Sponsorship Incentive Scheme

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the total grants made under the Northern Ireland business sponsorship incentive scheme in each financial year since its inception and the total related business sponsorship for the same years.

Dr. Mawhinney: The business sponsorship incentive scheme was introduced in Northern Ireland in August 1987. Grants paid out under the scheme in the 1987-88 financial year totalled £73,023. The related business sponsorship amounted to £115,362.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) life sentence prisoners and (b) prisoners detained during the pleasure of the Secretary of State there are in Northern Ireland's prisons, excluding those who have been given release dates; and how many in each category are Loyalist, Republican and undifferentiated prisoners.

Mr. Stanley: The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) life sentence prisoners and (b) prisoners detained during the pleasure of the Secretary of State have been given release dates in each year since the setting up of the Northern Ireland life sentence review board; and how many in each category were Loyalist, Republican and undifferentiated prisoners.

Mr. Stanley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the hon. Member for Leicester, South (Mr. Marshall) on 14 March at columns 447-48.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) life sentence prisoners and (b) prisoners detained during the pleasure of the Secretary of State have been released on licence each year since 1980; how many in each category were Loyalist, Republican and undifferentiated prisoners; and what was the average length of sentence served by Loyalist, Republican and undifferentiated prisoners in each category.

Mr. Stanley: The information requested is as follows:

Persons serving life/pleasure released on licence since 1980

Northern Ireland Hospice

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when his Department hopes to be in a position to provide additional financial help to the Northern Ireland Hospice to enable it to meet the financial consequences of the recent nurses' pay review; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The Department's policy is to offer financial help towards the administration costs of the regional office of voluntary bodies. Boards may help with service costs which includes nurses' salaries. The Department is committed to helping the Northern Ireland Hospice with its central administration costs and will be informing the hospice shortly of the level of grant-aid available for the 1988-89 year.

New Hospital (Antrim)

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the estimated running costs per annum of the first half of the proposed new hospital at Antrim.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 9 May 1988]: I would refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to the hon. Member for Antrim, East (Mr. Beggs) on 13 April 1988.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Pakistan

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made by Her Majesty's ambassador to Pakistan and the Government of Pakistan concerning prison conditions.

Mr. Mellor: The Government of Pakistan are well aware of our concern for human rights in Pakistan. There has been no specific representation about prison conditions.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what visits to prisons have been made by British embassy staff in Pakistan in the past year.

Mr. Mellor: British embassy staff have made one prison visit in the past year to see a British citizen detained in Peshawar. In addition, staff from the consulate general in Karachi have visited another British prisoner on approximately 15 occasions.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings Her Majesty's embassy in Pakistan has had with opposition political parties, human rights groups and trades unions in the last year.

Mr. Mellor: British embassy staff, including Her Majesty's ambassador, have frequent meetings with a wide range of political contacts, including opposition leaders, human rights activists and trade union leaders.

Denmark

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Government of the United States of America concerning the non-nuclear defence policies of the Government of Denmark.

Mr. Mellor: Allied Governments discuss fully together all issues related to our ability to maintain collective defence and security.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made on behalf of Her Majesty's Government to the Government of Denmark concerning their non-nuclear defence policy.

Mr. Mellor: Denmark's policy on nuclear weapons is of long standing, and is well-known to her allies in NATO. Denmark is also well aware of her allies' views on nuclear issues, including those of Her Majesty's Government.

Bolshevik Revolution

Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when those British citizens entitled to compensation for the confiscation of their property, during the Bolshevik revolution of 1917 will receive the funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: It is hoped that payments to successful property claimants will be made towards the end of 1989. At the same time, a final payment will be made to successful bond claimants who received an interim payment of 10 per cent. of the face value of a bond at the end of last year.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to when the inquest into the Gibraltar killings is to be held.

Mr. Mellor: The Gibraltar authorities have announced that the inquest will open on 27 June.

Swiss Companies (Share Ownership)

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Swiss Government on the subject of barriers to share ownership by United Kingdom companies and individuals in Swiss companies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: There have been no representations on this specific issue, but discussions between the Community and EFTA countries cover a wide range of trade issues, including the impact of the single market 1992 campaign.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Exchange Rates

3. Mr. Worthington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the effect on the United Kingdom balance of payments of recent changes in the sterling/United States dollar exchange rate.

59. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the effect on the United Kingdom balance of payments of recent changes in the sterling exchange rate.

Mr. Lawson: The outcome for the current account of the balance of payments depends on many more factors than just the sterling-dollar exchange rate. Much more important for the maintenance of competitiveness is the need to control unit costs.

Inheritance Tax

9. Mr. Soames: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many rates of inheritance tax have been eliminated since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In 1979 there were 14 rates of capital transfer tax chargeable on death, and 17 rates chargeable on lifetime transfers. There is now a single rate of inheritance tax.

Take-home Pay

15. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage increase in real take-home pay for a married man on half average earnings with two children (a) from 1973-74 to 1978-79 and (b) from 1978-79 to 1988-89.

26. Mr. Wood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage increase in real take-home pay for a married man on half average earnings with two children (a) from 1973-74 to 1978-79 and (b) from 1978-79 to 1988-89.

55. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage increase in real take-home pay for a married man on half average earnings with two children (a) from 1973-74 to 1978-79 and (b) from 1978-79 to 1988-89.

70. Mr. Gerald Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the percentage increase in real take-home pay for a married man on average earnings with two children (a) from 1973-74 to 1978-79 and (b) from 1978-79 to 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: His real take-home pay is expected to have risen by 21¼ per cent. since 1978-79 compared with just over 4 per cent. between 1973-74 and 1978-79.

Disposable Income

18. Mr. Robert B. Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of real personal disposable income in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Major: Real personal disposable income in 1987 is estimated to have been 15 per cent. higher than in 1979. Further growth is expected this year.

Balance of Payments

20. Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the balance of payments deficit for 1988-89.

Mr. Major: At Budget time, my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer forecast a current account deficit of £4 billion for 1988 as a whole.

Labour Statistics

21. Mr. Colin Shepherd: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much total employment rose in the United Kingdom in 1987.

23. Mr. Brandon-Bravo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much total employment rose in the United Kingdom in 1987.

Mr. Major: Total employment in the United Kingdom rose by half a million in 1987, the largest annual increase for 30 years.

Export Performance

22. Mr. Beaumont-Dark: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what account his economic policy takes of the impact of the sterling exchange rate on the export performance of British industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The interests of British industry are best served by the Government maintaining their commitment to the defeat of inflation.

Inflation

24. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the rate of inflation.

Mr. Brooke: In the 12 months to March 1988 the level of inflation, as measured by the General Index of Retail Prices (RPI), was 3·5 per cent.

25. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the rate of inflation; and what he expects it to be by the end of the current year.

Mr. Brooke: My right hon. Friend forecast at the time of the Budget that the RPI will increase in the year to the fourth quarter of 1988 by 4 per cent.

31. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of inflation.

Mr. Lilley: In the 12 months to March 1988 the level of inflation, as measured by the General Index of Retail Prices (RPI), was 3·5 per cent.

33, Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the rate of inflation for 1988-89.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor forecast at the time of the Budget that the GDP deflator will increase by 4½ per cent. in 1988-89 over the previous financial year. He forecast the RPI to increase by 4 per cent. in the year to mid-1989.

35. Mr. Cummings: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the rate of inflation to the end of 1989.

Mr. Lilley: The Government have not made a forecast for inflation to the end of 1989.

54. Sir John Farr: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the current annual rate of inflation; and what was the comparable figure 10 years ago.

Mr. Lilley: In the 12 months to March 1988 the level of inflation, as measured by the General Index of Retail Prices (RPI), was 3·5 per cent. In March 1978 the rate was 9·1 per cent.

69. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest forecast for the rate of inflation for the rest of 1988.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor forecast at the time of the Budget that the RPI will increase in the year to the fourth quarter of 1988 by 4 per cent.

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the outturn rate of inflation for 1988-89.

Mr. Brooke: I refer the hon. Member to the forecast made in my right hon. Friend's Financial Statement and Budget Report 1988-89, paragraphs 3.45 and 3.46.

Husband and Wife Taxation

27. Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect upon elderly taxpayers of the change to independent taxation of husband and wife.

49. Mr. Carrington: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect upon elderly taxpayers of the change to independent taxation of husband and wife.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Over 80 per cent. of the 1·1 million elderly married couples paying tax under the present system will have less tax to pay under independent taxation, and 160,000 elderly couples will be taken out of tax altogether.

40. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect upon married women with small incomes from savings of the change to independent taxation of husband and wife.

50. Mrs. Gorman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the effect upon married women with small incomes from savings of the change to independent taxation of husband and wife.

Mr. Norman Lamont: It is estimated that, at forecast 1990-91 levels of income, about 700,000 married women with investment income or pensions of less than £1,000 per annum will gain an average of about £140 from the change to independent taxation. A further 800,000 with incomes between £1,000 and £5,000 will gain an average of about £290.

Income Tax

28. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what further evidence he has of any link between work incentives and cuts in the highest rates of income tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Cutting marginal tax rates undoubtedly gives a stimulus to enterprise, initiative and effort. Cuts in the highest rates will encourage managers and skilled professionals to work and pay tax in this country rather than abroad. These effects inevitably take some time to build up. A number of econometric studies identify a positive incentive effect, despite tending to look only at the short term. Since top tax rates were cut in 1978-79 the share of tax paid by the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers has increased from 24 to 30 per cent.

39. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the weekly value to a married man on half average male earnings of the changes in income tax for 1988-89.

48. Mr. Brazier: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the weekly value to a married man on half average male earnings of the changes in income tax for 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: £2·43. The calculation assumes that the wife has no earnings and that the only allowance or relief claimed is the married man's allowance.

42. Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly value to the average pensioner couple of the changes in income tax for 1988-89.

52. Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly value to the average pensioner couple of the changes in income tax for 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for Keighley (Mr. Waller).

76. Mr. Neil Hamilton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many higher rates of income tax have been eliminated since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since 1979 the number of higher rates has been reduced from nine to just one. In addition the investment income surcharge has been abolished.

Manufacturing Output

29. Mr. Hannam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much manufacturing output has increased since the first half of 1979.

37. Mr. Hind: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much manufacturing output has increased since the first half of 1979.

47. Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much manufacturing output has increased since the first half of 1979.

Mr. Major: In the three months to February 1988 manufacturing output was 2½ per cent. higher than in the first half of 1979.

Manufacturing Investment

30. Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the outlook for manufacturing investment in 1988.

68. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a further statement on the outlook for manufacturing investment in 1988.

Mr. Major: The Budget forecast projected growth of 11½ per cent. in manufacturing investment in 1988. The April CBI industrial trends survey also points to strong investment growth, with the balance of firms expecting to increase investment in plant and machinery over the next 12 months at the highest level for 15 years.

VAT (Books and Newspapers)

32. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on the zero-rating for value added tax of books and newspapers.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor has received a number of representations in favour of maintaining VAT zero rating for books and newspapers.

Finance (No. 2) Bill

34. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received following publication of the Finance (No. 2) Bill.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received a number on various subjects.

Married Persons' Tax Allowance

36. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking an amendment to the Finance (No. 2) Bill to provide for the married persons' tax allowance to vary according to the number of dependent children; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I am not aware of any representations on this point. Child tax allowances formerly gave taxpayers a measure of support for children but were abolished in 1979 following the introduction of child benefit.

Balance of Payments

38. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he now expects the balance of payments deficit to be for 1988-89.

75. Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his present forecast of the balance of payments current account deficit for 1988.

Mr. Major: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer to the hon. Member for Liverpool, West Derby (Mr. Wareing).

Alcoholic Beverages (Duties)

41. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the cost in terms of lost revenue of harmonising the duties on alcoholic beverages.

Mr. Lilley: On the basis of the Commission's proposals, around £2·5 billion per year.

Corporation Tax

43. Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the standard rate of corporation tax has been reduced since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The main rate of corporation tax was 52 per cent. for the financial year commencing 1 April 1979. The proposed rate for 1988-89 is 35 per cent.

Interest Rates

44. Mr. Hunter: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the current level of interest rates.

Mr. Lilley: Bank base rates are 8 per cent.

Retail Price Inflation

45. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average of retail price inflation over the past five years.

78. Mr. David Martin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the average of retail price inflation over the past five years.

Mr. Lilley: About 4·6 per cent.

Exchange Rates

46. Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next proposes to meet the Finance Ministers of the Group of Seven countries to discuss exchange rates.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor meets his opposite numbers in the major industrial countries from time to time to discuss a range of international economic issues.

Tax Breaks

51. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax breaks are eliminated or reduced by the Finance (No. 2) Bill 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Gravesham (Mr. Arnold).

Output

53. Mr. Wolfson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of output in 1987.

Mr. Watts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the growth of output in 1987.

Mr. Major: The output measure of gross domestic product at constant factor cost (1980 prices) for 1987 was 4·8 per cent. higher than the corresponding figure for 1986. Over the same period the average measure of GDP rose by 4·4 per cent.

Capital Gains Tax

56. Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the financial effect in a full year of the changes in capital gains tax for gains made before 1982 announced in the Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For gains realised in 1988-89, the full-year cost of bringing forward the base date for capital gains to 31 March 1982 is estimated to be £120 million for individuals and trusts and £250 million for companies.

Where assets were acquired before April 1982 gains accruing since then will remain in charge and for individuals and trusts will be affected by other changes announced in the Budget.

Golden Handshakes

57. Mr. Sean Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the financial effect on the Exchequer in a full year of the changes in taxation arrangements for executive golden handshakes announced in the Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Assuming no consequential changes to the distribution of termination payments, the proposed increase in the tax-free slice of termination payments from £25,000 to £30,000 and abolition of the reduced rates of tax which applied to the next £50,000 of such payments are expected to lead to a small yield of £1 million to £2 million in a full year.

Tax Changes

58. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the estimated revenue effect of the Budget increase tax changes as they affect (a) the top 5 per cent. of earners and (b) the bottom 5 per cent. of earners.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The direct revenue costs in a full year of the Budget income tax changes above indexation for the top 5 per cent. of taxpayers, who will nearly all have earned income, are about £2·7 billion. The corresponding figure for the bottom 5 per cent. of people with some earned income is negligible since the levels of earnings will be below tax thresholds.

Inheritance Tax

60. Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the net effect on the Exchequer of the changes in inheritance taxation announced in the Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The net effect of the Budget changes in inheritance tax is estimated at a full-year cost of £220 million measured from an indexed base.

Corporate Investment and Production

61. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage increases there have been in corporate investment and production between 1983 and 1987 in the United Kingdom; what changes have been made in levels of personal income tax in this period; and what information he has on comparable figures for France.

Mr. Major: Between 1983 and 1987 business investment in the United Kingdom increased by 17 per cent.—more than in France where it increased by only 9 per cent. Figures for the growth of output of the United Kingdom corporate sector are not readily available, but over the same period the output of the production industries, which exclude agriculture forestry and fishing construction and services, increased by 11 per cent. in the United Kingdom. In France the corresponding figure was 4¼ per cent.

In 1983-84, the basic rate of income tax was 30p in the pound and it had been reduced to 27p by 1987-88. Comparisons with France are difficult because of the different tax structure. But, over the same period, the scale of personal tax rates in France did not change for most people.

Foreign Exchange Intervention

62. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to publish detailed analyses of foreign exchange intervention.

Mr. Lilley: No. It is the long-standing practice of successive Governments not to reveal details of foreign exchange intervention.

Tax and Prices Index

63. Mr. Hayward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the rise in the tax and prices index in the 12 months to March 1988.

Mr. Lilley: In the 12 months to March 1988 the tax and price index rose by 1·6 per cent.

Productivity

64. Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest figures for the growth in United Kingdom productivity since 1980.

Mr. Major: Whole economy output per head rose at an average annual rate of 2·7 per cent. between 1980 and 1987. Manufacturing output per head rose at an average annual rate of 5·1 per cent. between 1980 and the three months ending in February 1988.

Pensioners (Tax)

65. Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking an amendment to the Finance (No. 2) Bill to alter the marginal tax rate position of pensioners; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Chief Secretary to my hon. Friend the Member for the Isle of Wight (Mr. Field) on 31 March 1988 at column 609.

Bank of England (Governor)

66. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the Governor of the Bank of England; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor meets the governor from time to time to discuss a variety of matters.

Overseas Assets

67. Mr. Key: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the stock of United Kingdom net overseas assets.

Mr. Major: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given earlier today by my right hon. Friend the Paymaster General to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Worcestershire (Mr. Forth).

Public Sector Debt

71. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next expects to publish a revised estimate for the public sector debt repayment for 1988-89.

Mr. Major: A revised estimate for 1988-89 will be published in the Autumn Statement.

Convergence

72. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he next plans to discuss problems of economic and financial convergence with his EEC counterparts.

Mr. Brooke: The next meeting of the European Community's Economic and Finance Council is expected to be on 6 June. There is also an informal meeting of European Community Finance Ministers on 14-15 May.

Avgas

73. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations have been received regarding the excise duty on Avgas.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations regarding the excise duty on Avgas.

Company Profitability

74. Mr. Stevens: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the rise in company profitability in 1987.

Mr. Major: The profitability of non-North sea industrial and commercial companies is provisionally estimated to have risen by 1½ percentage points between 1986 and 1987 to 10½ per cent.—the highest level for about 20 years.

Job Creation

77. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has of the effect of his Budget on job creation in the north-west.

Mr. Major: My right hon. Friend's Budget provides the best possible environment for economic growth and enterprise in all parts of the country, including the north-west. The number of unemployed in the north-west has fallen by over 20 per cent. since June 1986 and over the past year the unemployment rate in the north-west has fallen by more than in any region other than the west midlands.

Company Tax Allowances

79. Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his policy towards the proposal from the Commission of the European Communities to harmonise company tax allowances.

Mr. Lamont: I understand that preliminary draft proposals by the European Commission for harmonisation of the business tax base are at present in preparation. The Government will study the proposals and have an opportunity to comment on them when they have been communicated formally to the Council of Ministers in due course.

Spending Power

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the average increase in net weekly spending power of a man with two children of seven and 11 years and a non-working wife for each extra £1 he earns if he increases his pay from (a) £100 to £110, (b) £110 to £120, (c) £120 to £130, (d) £130 to £140 and (e) £140 to £150, assuming he pays average rent and rates.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The figures are set out in the table. The man is assumed not to be contracted out of SERPs, to claim family credit and to claim only the married man's allowance. The figures take account of the Budget changes in income tax and of the new benefit system from April 1988. The family would not be entitled to rent or rate rebates.

Increase in net spending power per £1 of extra earnings for married man with children aged 7 and 11, paying average rent and rates

Range of increase in weekly income	Extra net spending power per £1 of extra earnings
(a) From £100 to £110	0·14
(b) From £110 to £120	0·20
(c) From £120 to £130	0·20
(d) From £130 to £140	0·20
(e) From £140 to £150	0·20

Employment

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much total employment rose in the United Kingdom in 1987.

Mr. Major: Total employment in the United Kingdom rose by half a million in 1987, the largest increase in 30 years.

Stock Exchange

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met the chairman of the stock exchange; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has meetings with the chairman of the stock exchange from time to time.

Retail Price Index (Error)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what basis he made his decision to refuse compensatory payments to those public sector pensioners who lost financially as a result of the Government's error in calculating the retail price index.

Mr. Brooke: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Croydon, South (Sir W. Clark) on 18 December 1987 at columns 845-46.

WALES

Limb Fitting

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) if he will list the existing facilities for limb fitting in Wales, whether he has any plans for extending the facilities available or providing new facilities; and if he will make a statement.

(2) what action is proposed to reduce travelling time and distances to existing limb fitting centres: and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: Limb fitting clinics are held at the artificial limb and appliance centres (ALAC) at Cardiff and Morriston. Patients in north Wales currently attend limb fitting clinics at Liverpool ALAC, although, as announced in Welsh health circular 87/11, it is intended to establish satellite ALACs in north Wales. The Welsh Health Common Service Authority, which is now responsible for the artificial limb and appliance service in Wales, will be pursuing this in discussion with health authorities and others.

The circular also referred to the need for improved transport facilities for patients travelling long distances from north Wales to Merseyside. Funds have since been made available to the Gwynedd health authority to enable fast, comfortable ambulance transport to be provided for such patients travelling to the regional radiotherapy facilities and the ALAC in Merseyside.

Hospital Waiting lists

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for urgent cases in Gwent hospitals;

(2) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for non-urgent cases in Welsh hospitals;

(3) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for (a) orthopaedic and (b) general operations in Wales;

(4) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for ear, nose and throat treatment in Gwent;

(5) What proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for out-patient treatment in Welsh hospitals;

(6) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for in-patient treatment in Gwent.

Mr. Grist: The management of waiting lists is the responsibility of the relevant district health authority. Authorities have been asked to submit to the Welsh Office revised action plans which identify the continuing problem areas and put forward solutions.

A total of £2 million has been allocated to authorities in Wales over the last two years to help them implement schemes for tackling the worst waiting list problems and a further £1 million is available in the current year. Distribution of these funds is being considered in the light of the revised action plans which have just been received.

NHS Funding

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional funds he plans to make available to the Health Service in (a) Wales, (b) Gwent and (c) Newport.

Mr. Grist: As a result of the Government's decision to fund in full the costs of the recently announced review bodies' awards to doctors, nurses and midwives and professions allied to medicine, an additional £38 million will be made available to the Health Service in Wales in the current financial year. Of this some £5 million is to be allocated to Gwent health authority. It will be the responsibility of that authority to determine its distribution within the district. The authority will also receive additional allocations during the course of the year from the £9·2 million which was earmarked for centrally directed developments when hospital and community health services' provision for 1988-89 was first announced by my right hon. Friend on 16 December 1987. To date some £900,000 of these central reserves has been set aside for approved and provisionally agreed developments in Gwent. These funds will be formally allocated to the authority as and when the developments proceed.

CIVIL SERVICE

Recycled Paper

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service what is the total consumption of paper by the Civil Service per year since 1979; and what proportion for each year is recycled.

Mr. Luce: Information of this nature is not available for the Civil Service in general or my Department in particular.

THE ARTS

Natural History Museum

Mr. Faulds: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether, with reference to his written answer on 24 February to the hon. Member for Warley, East, Official Report, column 196, he will now publish in the Official Report the number of attendances at the British museum (natural history) during the calendar year 1987; and whether he will at the same time give the number for 1986, together with the percentage figure represented by the difference.

Mr. Luce: I understand that the number of attendances at the British museum (natural history) during 1987 was 1,999,130 compared with 3,239,685 in 1986, a difference of 38·3 per cent.

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since he last made an announcement on the subject to the House.

Mr. Luce: Since my announcement on 1 February, at column 462, I am pleased to announce a portrait of Captain William Wade by Thomas Gainsborough has been accepted in lieu of estate duty. The offer was conditional on allocation to Bath city council. This acceptance followed the precedent set by the acceptance of Picasso's "Weeping Woman" in that Bath city council agreed to pay the owner the difference (£230,000) between the tax liability to be satisfied, £638,444 and the "special price" of £868,444. This was made possible by a call on the reserve in accordance with the arrangements agreed in July 1985.

I have also decided, subject to the satisfactory completion of the improvements to the Tate's archive storage accommodation, to allocate the archives of the late Lord Clark to the Tate gallery.

Finally, 10 portrait miniatures accepted from the estate of the late right hon. Viscount Harcourt have been allocated; nine to the Victoria and Albert museum and one, a portrait of Mary Sidney, Countess of Pembroke, to the national portrait gallery.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Fiji

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what projects are run in Fiji by the Commonwealth Development Corporation; what money is involved in each of them; and what periods the commitments cover.

Mr. Mellor: The Commonwealth Development Corporation is now involved in seven projects in Fiji. It has either provided loan money or taken up equities in each project. The companies or institutions involved, with the amounts, are as follows:

Position at 31 December 1987

	Equity Fiji $ million	Loan £ million
Fiji Citrus Products	0·23	0·32
Fiji Development Co Ltd	0·53	0·94
Fiji Electricity Authority	—	13·15
Fiji Pine Commission	—	3·61
Fiji Sugar Corporation	—	4·02
Tropik Wood Industries Ltd	2·00	4·16
Fiji Forest Industries Ltd	—	1·55
TOTAL	2·76	27·75

The equities are not held for any set term. The loans have agreed terms for payment of capital and interest to CDC over varying periods up to the year 2000. The CDC is also negotiating a loan of £5 million to the Fiji Development bank, for on-lending to small farmers and fishermen, to be disbursed by CDC between 1988 and 1991.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if there has been any new technical co-operation with Fiji since May 1987.

Mr. Mellor: Technical co-operation with Fiji concentrates on manpower support and training. Since May 1987, 17 new awards for training in the United Kingdom have been made and the following new appointments in Fiji have been financed or supplemented from the bilateral country programme:

Financial Adviser to Posts and Telecommunications
Director, Roads and Airfields
Principal Utilisation Officer, Forestry
Director, Water and Sewage.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the level of United Kingdom aid to Fiji since May 1987; and if he will give figures for the equivalent period for 1986-87.

Mr. Mellor: Assistance to Fiji from the Overseas Development Administration from May 1987 to the end of March 1988 totalled £971,938. The amount for the equivalent period in 1986-87 was £1,003,971. This excludes expenditure by the Commonwealth Development Corporation.

Ethiopia

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what development aid has been given to Ethiopia by the European Community in the last year; and what has been the United Kingdom contribution.

Mr. Mellor: In 1987 the European Community approved three development projects for Ethiopia under the third Lomé convention, namely:

	£ million
Grant funding
—Integrated training programme linked to the development of the rural sector	4·9
—North Shewa rural development and land reclamation programme	16·6
Risk capital (managed by the European Investment Bank)
—Development of an opencast gold mine and or treatment plant at Northern Lega Dambi, Sidamo Province	14·5

The United Kingdom share of the total funding is about £6 million.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list any new aid projects, and any new programme aid agreements for Fiji approved since May 1987.

Mr. Mellor: There have been no financial aid projects or programme aid commitments either from the bilateral country programme or by the Commonwealth Development Corporation. Our bilateral country programme now consits of technical co-operation alone.

UN Aid Target

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, pursuant to the answer of 6 May, Official Report, column 639, to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison); he will tabulate progress made in 1979 in reaching the United Nations aid target of 0·7 per cent. of gross national product.

Mr. Mellor: The information is as follows:

Net official development assistance percentage of gross national product (GNP)

	Per cent.
1979	0·52
1980	0·35
1981	0·43
1982	0·37
1983	0·35
1984	0·33
1985	0·33
1986	[1]0·31

[1] Revised from 0·32 per cent.

ENERGY

Nuclear Fusion (Research)

Mr. Frank Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) whether he proposes to take any action with regard to future funding and support in relation to research in nuclear fusion, on the conclusions of ETSU–R43; what assessment he has made of the extent to which the joint European Torus project provides value for money; and what is his assessment of the prospects for commercial power from nuclear fusion within the next 70 years;

(2) whether he intends to seek independent advice, in addition to that from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, on the next stage of research funding for nuclear fusion, the next European Torus; whether he will make it his policy to publish any future evaluation of fusion research; whether he will sponsor a conference on the subject; and whether he will make a statement;

(3) if he will seek to obtain for his departmental library a copy of the recently published assessment of nuclear fusion sponsored by the European Parliament and produced by the Centre for Energy Studies at South Bank polytechnic; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: ETSU report, R43, is a document providing background information and, as such, has been available in my Department and influenced continuing decisions on the funding of fusion research for some time. We are currently considering with Euratom partners a proposal to extend to 1992 the life of the joint European Torus project at Culham, which is the only device in the world intended for sustained experiments on deuterium-tritium plasma. Given the need to demonstrate operating reliability of any plant over a number of years, it is unlikely that fusion power will be commercially available before the middle of the next century.

The next decision needed on the next European Torus will be whether to proceed to detailed engineering design. It is common ground between the United Kingdom and its partners that such a decision cannot be made before 1990 or without an independent evaluation of the Community fusion programme. Advice will be needed from many different sources. My Department has seen the interim report by the Centre for Energy Studies, which was prepared for the European Parliament's committee on energy research and technology.

Advanced Gas-cooled Reactors

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the effect of refuelling advanced gas-cooled reactors on their standard electrical output.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is an operational matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board, and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate has on the radiological content of gas released during depressurisation of advanced gas-cooled reactors.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Monitoring the radioactivity of gaseous discharges from AGRs is not a function of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate. The responsibility for authorising discharges of radioactive substances rests with the authorising Departments (Department of the Environment and the Scottish Development Department).

Nuclear Installations (Refuelling)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish the reports of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate on on-load refuelling.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Operators of AGR stations must comply with NII's requirements in respect of safety in order to secure consent for continued operation. The HSE has no plans to publish reports on on-load refuelling.

Civil Plutonium (Exports)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all instances since May 1979 when he has given permission for the export of civil plutonium under section 2(i) of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

Mr. Michael Spicer [holding answer 6 May 1988]: Since May 1979, permission for the export of civil plutonium under section 2(1) of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965 has been given on 19 occasions.

Information on individual exports is commercially sensitive. The countries of destination are included in the reply by my hon. Friend the Member for Eddisbury (Mr. Goodlad) on 18 February 1987 at column 635 in reply to a question by the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen).

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Children (Special Educational Needs)

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received concerning the implications of the report on the teaching of children with special educational needs.

Mr. Dunn: In the past two months, the Department has received about 2,550 representations about the Educational Reform Bill which include reference to children with special educational needs.

Teachers' Superannuation Fund

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has issued any further guidance to independent schools using the teachers' superannuation fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Information and guidance on teachers' superannuation is provided by means of circular letters to all relevant employers, including independent schools. Since January 1987 four such letters have been issued, covering a wide range of subjects. Of particular relevance to independent schools was Teachers' Pensions Letter No. 89, issued in February 1988, relating to salary increases for teachers approaching retirement.

Education Authorities (Property)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the local education authorities in areas outside the Inner London education authority regarding the future of their properties within their authority district.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has made it clear that he is willing to discuss the future of Inner London education authority property located outside the inner London area both with the inner London councils and with the authorities in whose area it is located. Such discussion is likely to take place in the context of the inner London councils' preparation of their development plans for the education service in their area.

ILEA (Property)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all property owned by the Inner London education authority outside the area served by the Inner London education authority.

Mr. Dunn: Comprehensive information on ILEA's property is held only by the authority itself. Under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill, currently under discussion in another place, the Inner London education authority will be required to make such information available to the inner London boroughs and other local authorities in which Inner London education authority property is located, as well as to my right hon. Friend.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Leicester Prison

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for how many prisoners Leicester prison was constructed; how many prisoners it holds at present; how many and what percentage of those prisoners are living three to a cell; what is the size of those cells; how many hours a day those prisoners on average spend locked into those cells; and what is the maximum time spent by prisoners locked in their cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The following is the available information.

Leicester prison was constructed as a county gaol in the 1820s, and information on the capacity of the buildings is not now readily available. The inmate accommodation was demolished and replaced in the 1880s.

On 4 May, 358 prisoners were held: 207 of these were located three to a cell, representing 57 per cent. of the total.

Most prisoners are in cells the dimensions of which are approximately 3·9 m by 2·2 m (8·5 sq m). Other cells vary slightly from these dimensions.

Time spent in cells is difficult to measure systematically because prisoners leave their cells for many different purposes. Locally assembled information shows that, in the seven-day period ended 4 May 1988, prisoners generally spent about 16·5 hours (sentenced prisoners serving 18 months or over) or 17·5 hours (unsentenced prisoners or those serving shorter sentences) locked in cells each day, with the following exceptions: prisoners in the special security unit (13 hours); in security category A and on the escape list (19 hours); in the prison hospital (19·5 hours); and segregated under rule 43 at their own request (19 hours).

The maximum time spent locked in cell may exceptionally extend to 23 hours a day for a small number of prisoners segregated under rule 43 for reasons for good order and discipline or who have reduced mobility due to sickness.

Citizenship Applications

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) of the applications for citizenship received in each month in the year 1987, how many and what percentage have now been processed; and what was the minimum, the average and the maximum waiting time for those applying for such processing;

(2) pursuant to the answer of 19 April, Official Report, column 408, of the estimated 290,000 citizenship applications received in 1987, how many grants of citizenship were refused; and how many are still in the course of processing.

Mr. Renton: Information is not available in the form requested. The number of applications for British citizenship received in the nationality division, and the number granted and refused, in each month during 1987 is as follows:

1987	Applications[1] received	Granted[2]	Refused[2]
January	4,587	4,874	298
February	4,503	6,728	373
March	4,475	7,255	341

1987	Applications[1] received	Granted[2]	Refused[2]
April	3,552	3,511	410
May	4,295	4,585	387
June	4,869	5,436	411
July	6,539	5,391	409
August	8,616	4,529	313
September	7,070	5,093	434
October	7,557	5,249	464
November	15,512	5,685	365
December	8,443	6,412	308

[1] These figures do not include applications received in Lunar house, but not yet received in the case-working groups.
[2] Provisional figures.

At the end of April there were approximately 250,000 applications for citizenship in the course of processing. Information about maximum and minimum waiting times is not readily available; the average waiting time for applications currently being completed is seven months for registration and 17 months for naturalisation.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how long he estimates that an application for British nationality received by him during the month of January will take before the same is acknowledged and processed, respectively;

(2) approximately how long he estimates that an application for citizenship currently waits at Lunar house before it is opened and acknowledged, respectively;

(3) how many sacks of applications for British nationality are currently awaiting opening at Lunar house.

Mr. Renton: The majority of applications received during January have now been acknowledged. The remainder, and all other current applications (in total about 9,400), will have been opened and acknowledged by the end of this month.

It is not yet possible to estimate how long, on average, it will be before decisions will be reached on applications received during January.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his Department's practice in the use of standard acknowledgement forms and standard processing methods in respect of applications for British nationality; and whether he will place in the Library copies of such standard forms and of all processing documents.

Mr. Renton: We make the fullest practicable use of standard forms and letters in order to hold down the cost of fees payable by applicants. Some 245 forms are at present used in connection with processing applications. Their purpose and method of use would in many cases not be clear without a detailed guide which it would be disproportionately expensive to prepare. For that and other reasons I am not willing to make such forms and documents available in the Library.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff are employed in the processing of applications for British citizenship; and what is his estimate of the average turnover of such staff during the course of a calendar year.

Mr. Renton: The number of staff employed in case-working groups processing applications for British citizenship has varied between 152 and 146 from 1 April 1987 to 31 March 1988, averaging 148 over the year.

These figues do not include staff processing inquiries about citizenship status, dealing with requests for application forms and maintaining the computer records which support the processing of cases.

Over that year the turnover of staff is estimated at 26 per cent.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how long he now estimates it will be before all applicants for British nationality who applied in 1987 will know whether such applications have been successful;

(2) what system his Department follows in processing applications for British nationality;

(3) whether he will institute an inquiry into the delay in opening, acknowledging and processing applications for British nationality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: No, since the initial stage of the work to deal with the 290,000 citizenship applications received in 1987, including over 100,000 in December 1987, has now been completed. All these applications have been acknowledged.

Unless there are exceptional reasons for taking a case out of turn, applications will be processed generally in order of receipt. We are considering the response to the recommendation of the Home Affairs Committee in its recent report (HC 340) about the time within which all applications received during 1987 should be decided, and will report our conclusions to the House.

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money by way of fees in respect of applications for British nationality he estimates to be contained in the citizenship applications currently awaiting opening and acknowledgement at Lunar house.

Mr. Renton: The amount of fees contained in the 9,400 citizenship applications received since late January which await to be opened in Lunar house depends on the proportions of registration and naturalisation applications, but is expected to be in the region of £750,000.

Neighbourhood Watch Scheme

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there are in Cambridgeshire for (a) the district council areas and (b) the towns of Whittlesey, March, Wisbech and Chatteris; and what were the comparable figures in 1987 and 1986.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that there were 168 neighbourhood watch schemes in Cambridgeshire at the end of April 1988, 66 at the end of April 1987 and seven at the end of April 1986. The total for the current year can be broken down by police sub-division (closely related to the district council areas) and section (equivalent to a town) as follows:

	Number of schemes
(a) Police sub-division
Peterborough	56
Fenland	28
Huntingdon	31
Cambridge (covers Cambridge City, East and South Cambridgeshire District Council areas)	53

	Number of schemes
(b) Police section
Whittlesey	1
March	18
Wisbech	7
Chatteris	2

Comparable figures for 1986 and 1987 are not available in this form.

Television (Scotland)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to (a) how many hours of television will be produced for regional consumption by BBC Scotland, STV, Grampian and Border Television in 1988, (b) how many hours of television in Gaelic are expected to be broadcast by BBC Scotland, STV, Grampian and Border Television in 1988 and (c) what were the equivalent figures for 1987.

Mr. Renton: I understand from the BBC and the IBA that the information sought is as follows:

Table 1
Regional programme production

Programme hours produced per year	1987	1988
BBC Scotland	863	[1]863
STV	507	496
Grampian	370	364
Border Television	235	[2]260

Table 2
Gaelic programmes

Programme hours transmitted per year	1987	1988
BBC Scotland	52	52
STV	21	[3]45
Grampian	34·5	[4]39·5
Border Television	—	—

[2] Border Television's transmission area covers the Isle of Man, northern England and southern Scotland. This figure represents the total output for the region.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, what information he has as to how many hours of television will be broadcast as a whole by BBC Scotland, STV, Grampian and Border Television in 1988.

Mr. Renton: I understand that BBC Scotland and the three ITV companies expect to transmit the following numbers of hours of programming during 1988:

Television programme hours to be transmitted in 1988

	Number
BBC Scotland—BBC 1	5,905
BBC 2	4,335
STV	7,686
Grampian	5,512
Border Television	[1]6,010

[1] This figure includes extra programming during the night hours which is expected to begin later in the year.

Gaelic

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy towards the broadcasting of television programmes in Gaelic; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: It is for the broadcasting authorities—the BBC and the IBA—to consider the emphasis which should be given to Gaelic broadcasting. They are responsible for the scheduling of programmes and for their content. I understand they recognise the important part Gaelic has to play in preserving the cultural heritage of Scotland.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to forbid the deliberate inhalation of solvents to create intoxication; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer the hon. and learned Member to the reply I gave to his earlier question on 21 April at col 516.

Public Record Office

Mr. Allason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to make the H0144 class of files publicly available at the Public Records Office.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Earlier papers in this class are being reviewed. As part of this review a further release for public inspection of some 3,250 files comprising between 40,000 and 50,000 sub files is planned later this summer.

Domestic Servants

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the total numbers of people admitted to the United Kingdom for each year since 1979 as domestic servants and au pairs; and from which countries.

Mr. Renton: The numbers of au pairs (excluding EC nationals) admitted to the United Kingdom by nationality are published annually in table 1 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom" (Cm. 166 for the 1986 edition) copies of which are in the Library. The figures for 1987 are as follows:

Numbers of au pairs admitted in 1987

Nationality	Number
Austria	820
Cyprus	[1]
Finland	710
Malta	[1]
Norway	600
Sweden	1,850
Switzerland	1,390
Turkey	200
Yugoslavia	480
Other countries and stateless	90
Total	6,150

[1] 5 or less.

Similar information regarding domestic servants and au pairs who are EC nationals is not available.

Asylum

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many special hardship visas have (a) been applied for at and (b) been granted by British posts overseas to people seeking asylum in the United Kingdom in 1986 and 1987; and what are the criteria for deciding such applications.

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for (a) asylum and (b) severe hardship visas were made at British diplomatic posts overseas in 1986 and 1987, not including applications for resettlement made at diplomatic posts outside the applicant's own country; how many such applications were (i) granted, (ii) refused and (iii) given exceptional leave to remain; and how an applicant qualifies for a severe hardship visa.

Mr. Renton: Assuming that the hon. Members are referring to the practice of entertaining applications made to British posts for asylum seekers wishing to come here, I regret that the figures sought are not available. Applications are referred to the Home Office for decision. Each is considered on its individual merits, in the light, inter alia, of the 1951 United Nations convention relating to the status of refugees and any links the applicant may have with the United Kingdom.

Cruise Missile Convoys

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for reports from the chief constables of Wiltshire, Thames Valley and Hampshire, as to the costs of policing cruise missiles convoys, per exercise, for each year since 1984.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: It is not the practice, for both operational and security reasons, to give details of matters relating to exercises conducted by nuclear missile units.

Guildford Pub Bombings

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to receive the report from the Metropolitan police concerning the inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the protection of those found guilty of the Guildford pub bombings; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend received a report from the Avon and Somerset police last month regarding inquiries arising from material submitted to him last year. This is now being considered, together with other matters raised about these convictions, and he expects to reach a conclusion shortly. We are not expecting any report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis.

Paul Hill

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) for what reasons Paul Hill, currently held in Her Majesty's prison Long Lartin was put into solitary confinement; and if he will make a statement;

(2) for how long, during his sentence, Paul Hill, currently held in Her Majesty's prison, Long Lartin, has been held in solitary confinement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Hill has not been in solitary confinement at any time. He has been removed from normal association in the interests of good order and discipline under the terms of prison rule 43 for a total of 585 days, and for offences against discipline has been awarded a total of 181 days cellular confinement. Information about other occasions when he has been segregated, for example under prison rule 48 when awaiting adjudication, is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times Paul Hill, currently in Her Majesty's prison Long Lartin, has been moved since first being taken into custody.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Hill moved four times before his trial in 1975 and 37 times since returning to prison under sentence, usually in the interests of good order and discipline.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make available the text of his reply to the letter he recently received from Amnesty International regarding the conduct of the appeal hearing of the six men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: Arrangements have been made for a copy to be placed today in the Library of the House.

Sunday Trading

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to be able to publish further proposals to amend the current Sunday trading laws; and in what form they will be published.

Mr. Renton: The Government's views are known. They favour complete deregulation of Sunday trading hours but will consider any practicable compromise short of this if a consensus can be achieved.

Prisoners (Diets)

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the total number of inmates in each of Her Majesty's prisons who are following (a) vegan diets, (b) vegetarian diets, (c) gluten-free diets and (d) diabetic diets.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

P and O Dispute

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) further to the statement on the P and O dispute on 5 May, Official Report, column 1017, if he will give details of each offence for which people were arrested, the date and place of each arrest and whether the person arrested has been convicted;

(2) further to the statement on the P and O dispute on 5 May, Official Report, column 1017, whether any arrests have been made following alleged threats of intimidation; and to whom the threats were reported.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information up to 10 May is as follows:

Date
16 April	One arrest for obstruction (cautioned and released).
18 April	One arrest for assault on the police, entering and remaining on the docks without authority and obstruction (charged and bailed to appear in court on 23 May).
26 April	Four arrests for assault on the police and obstruction (all charged and bailed to appear in court on 6 June).
27 April	Two arrests for breach of the peace (released without being charged).
29 April	One arrest for breach of the peace (released without being charged).
30 April	One arrest for breach of the peace (released without being charged); and two arrests under section 4 of the Public Order Act 1986 (one charged and bailed to appear in court on 6 June and one released without charge); and one arrest under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1968 (charged and bailed to appear in court on 6 June).
5 May	One arrest under section 5 of the Public Order Act 1986 (charged and bailed to appear in court on 13 June); and one arrest for obstruction of the highway and breach of the peace (charged and bailed to appear in court on 13 June).
6 May	One arrest for criminal damage to the homes of two working seamen (charged, bailed and due to re-appear in court on 19 May).
10 May	One arrest for criminal damage to a working seaman's vehicle (charged and due to appear in court on 11 May).

All the arrests except those for criminal damage occurred in close proximity to Dover eastern dock. Reports to the police of intimidation are being recorded and investigated.

Solvent Abuse

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money Her Majesty's Government have spent, either directly or through grants to independent organisations, on educational material warning of the dangers of solvent abuse, in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: I have been asked to reply.

Details of expenditure in the years for which figures are available were given in my reply to the hon. and learned Member on 20 April at column 463.

DEFENCE

Scout Movement

Mr. Ronnie Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what information his Department keeps on the Scout movement; why the information is collected; who supplies the information to his Department; who has access to the information; and why parents were not asked for permission.

Mr. Freeman: What information the Ministry has is provided by the Scout movement itself, and relates primarily to the operation of the Scout movement in north-west Europe. Here the army assists with the administration of the movement but policy, organisation, records and running the Scouts remain the responsibility of the movement which maintains a civilian field commissioner in Germany for this purpose.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Freeman: The Ministry of Defence's target reduction in non-operational energy usage for 1988-89 is almost £10 million in cash terms. Electricity used for lighting is not separately identifiable from electricity consumption as a whole, and it is therefore not possible to say how much of this is attributable to electric lighting. I regret that it would not be possible to identify investment in new energy-efficient lighting planned for 1988-89 without disproportionate cost.

Fiji (Military Personnel)

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if any military personnel from Fiji have received training within the United Kingdom or in the United Kingdom bases overseas since May 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Since May 1987 no member of the Fijian armed forces has received training, either within the United Kingdom or in the United Kingdom bases overseas.

Cruise Missiles

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions have taken place with (a) the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation headquarters and (b) the Government of the United States of America concerning the continued deployment and disposal of cruise missiles in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Such discussions are confidential.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many times per month since 1984, cruise missile exercises have been conducted from RAF Greenham Common.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No exercises involving cruise missiles have been conducted from Greenham Common.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has, in the course of his frequent meetings with North Atlantic Treaty Organisation colleagues, discussed the possible deployment of further sea-launched cruise missiles as part of the maintenance of nuclear forces.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 26 April at column 144.

Stornoway (US Officers' Visit)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the visit of a group of United States military officers to Stornoway on 16 February.

Mr. Freeman: I believe the visit to which the hon. Member refers involved two United States officers who passed through RAF Stornoway in connection with a visit to an exercise in the north Atlantic.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the rules of engagement under which service personnel operated in Gibraltar in shooting three IRA personnel.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The material facts concerning the deaths of the terrorists will be considered by the coroner in Gibraltar, acting with a jury, in accordance with the normal procedures for the conduct of inquests under Gibraltar law. The purpose of the inquest will be to determine how the terrorists died and it would not be appropriate for me to make any further comment before then.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Party Political Promotions

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is his policy on the use of parliamentary resources and facilities for the purposes of promoting a political party.

Mr. Wakeham: It is a long-standing convention of the House that the resources and facilities extended to individual Members and political parties should not be used for the furtherance of political interests. That principle has always governed the rulings of the House authorities and the Services Committee.

Annie's Bar

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Lord President of the Council what is the annual turnover of Annie's Bar; and which members of the press have access.

Mr. Wakeham: The annual turnover of Annie's Bar up to 31 March 1988 was £21,790 excluding VAT. Access is restricted to some Lobby correspondents and to the heads of the parliamentary staff and sketch writers of certain newspapers and press agencies.

Line of Route

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Lord President of the Council if there are any plans to reverse the present line of route so that it commences at Westminster Hall and finishes at the Norman Porch; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: There are no such plans. This proposal was considered by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee on 10 February 1986 when it was rejected, mainly because of the security implications.

Mr. Ken Hargreaves: To ask the Lord President of the Council if he will raise the present line of route with the Select Committee on House of Commons (Services); and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wakeham: The arrangements for parties on the line of route are kept under continuous review by the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee of the Services Committee. In the past two years, several measures have been introduced to improve these arrangements, on the recommendation of the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee and with the approval of the Services Committee.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

80. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which regions adult unemployment has fallen in the United Kingdom over the last 12 months.

81. Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which regions adult unemployment has fallen in the United Kingdom over the last 12 months.

82. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment in which regions adult unemployment has fallen in the United Kingdom over the last 12 months.

Mr. Lee: Unemployment has fallen in all regions of the United Kingdom over the last 12 months. The largest falls in the unemployment rate have been in the west midlands, the north-west and Yorkshire and Humberside.

Earnings

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the trend of earnings.

Mr. Nicholls: The underlying trend in the growth of average earnings over the economy as a whole increased last autumn, since when it has been running at 8½ per cent. a year. This follows a period of over four years at about 7½ per cent. Part of this increase is due to the buoyant economy but many basic pay settlements are also too high. Settlements that are not justified by the needs of the enterprise concerned raise costs unnecessarily and are bad for jobs. They discourage recruitment and hold back further output, investment and improved competitiveness on which the growth of employment depends.

Dock Labour Scheme (Levy Payments)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total management levy and severance levy paid by port employers in each year from 1968 to 1987 for the financing of the dock labour scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The levy paid by employers was as follows:

	Management £	Severance £
1968	1,887,697	—
1969	1,936,387	1,171,884
1970	1,964,779	3,929,558
1971	1,930,892	4,334,907
1972	1,687,386	5,556,306
1973	1,709,761	5,654,089
1974	1,966,083	2,630,184
1975	2,518,947	3,729,800
1976	3,486,540	6,657,361
1977	3,411,061	7,478,529
1978	3,364,555	7,850,456
1979	3,929,712	9,069,435

	Management £	Severance £
1980	4,927,484	9,507,058
1981	5,207,640	12,500,957
1982	5,073,635	12,257,110
1983	4,977,509	10,955,903
1984	4,479,791	11,540,407
1985	4,282,645	5,523,879
1986	4,336,891	1,835,979
1987	4,433,636	2,047,046

Blind Persons (Reader Service)

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money has been allocated to the Manpower Services Commission's personal reader service for the blind for each of the last two years for which figures are available; and of that how much has been spent.

Mr. Nicholls: In 1986-87 £42,660 was allocated to the personal reader service for the blind for YTS and £2,236 was spent. In 1987-88, of the £42,660 allocated, £3,000 was spent. For new JTS £8,000 was allocated for 1987-88. No money has been spent.

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was the average cost per trainee of the Manpower Services Commission's personal reader service for the blind for each of the years since it was introduced;

(2) what has been the average number of hours of reading service provided per trainee under the Manpower Services Commission's personal reader service for the blind since its introduction.

Mr. Nicholls: Information on the average number of hours provided and the cost per trainee of the personal reader service for the blind is not available. In YTS, the service is provided for a maximum of 450 hours per trainee over a two-year scheme. In new JTS the service is provided for 225 hours over one year's training with a pro-rata allocation for shorter periods on the scheme. On both schemes, trainees' use of this resource varies according to their individual needs.

Communication Service for the Deaf

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to extend the communication service for the deaf to the enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Cope: The nature of the enterprise allowance scheme means that participants attend very few formal meetings. Interpreters can be provided for deaf people attending the introductory awareness day and for their free business counselling sessions with the small firms service.

Employment Training Programme

Mr. Sims: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the employment training programme will include courses specifically for people with special learning needs.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training will offer all participants an individual action plan, drawn up to meet their particular needs. In some cases, this may involve training designed specifically for those people with learning difficulties.

Voluntary Projects Programme

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are his plans for the continuation of the voluntary projects programme schemes after August.

Mr. Nicholls: From 5 September, employment training will replace the majority of MSC programmes for unemployed adults including the voluntary projects programme. However, some projects may continue until March 1989.

Employment training combines the best features of current programmes including VPP and we expect that many current VPP providers will move forward into the new programme. Employment training will include special arrangements for an extended introduction to training for disadvantaged clients, similar to that developed through the VPP in recent years.

Servants

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what actions have been taken by his Department to inquire into the circumstances of domestic servants and au pairs working in Britain; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Terms and conditions of employment are, in general, matters for agreement between the parties concerned.

TRANSPORT

Safety at Sea

Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about standards of passenger safety at sea.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend has recently received frequent representations about ferry safety from organisations and individuals.

Public Transport (Fares)

Mr. John Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest information about public transport fares levels in shire county areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: The average fare per journey for adult single local bus tickets in the financial year 1986-87 was 33p in metropolitan areas and 47p in non-metropolitan areas. However, the average journey length was longer in non-metropolitan areas.

Owing to the wide variations in types of train ticket and in journey lengths, comparable data on train fares cannot realistically be provided. However, information on BR receipts and traffic by operating sector are contained in section 3 of "Transport Statistics of Great Britain 1976-1986," a copy of which is in the Library.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Tax and Benefits System

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables, similar to those in his Department's tax/benefit model table, showing net weekly spending power for a single childless person aged 18 to 24 years, earning (a) £40, (b) £50, (c) £60, (d) £70, (e) £80, (f) £90, and (g) £100 under the existing tax and benefits system, following the Budget and the social security changes, in each case assuming the person is paying average local authority rent and rates.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is provided in the table.

New tax and benefit system from April 1988

I regret that my reply to a similar question from the hon. Member on 11 March 1988 at columns 396-8 contained an error. The figures given in the second table related to single people over age 25 and not to the 18-24 years age group specified. Following is the corrected table:

Continence (Advice)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many continence advisers are currently employed by each local health authority in England and Wales; and in 1985;

(2) what plans he has to expand the continence advisory service in England and Wales;

(3) what steps he is taking to monitor the effectiveness of continence advisory services in health authorities in England and Wales.

Mr. Newton: I regret that statistics on the number of continence advisers employed by local health authorities are not collected centrally.

With regard to the expansion of continence advisory services, I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 26 January 1988 at column 192. The effectiveness of continence advisory services is not monitored directly. That is a responsibility of the management of the local health authority concerned.

Interpreters

Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many interpreters there are in the offices of his Department in Tower Hamlets.

Mr. Portillo: There are no professional interpreters in the Department's five offices in Tower Hamlets. However, there are 70 members of staff in these offices able and willing to act as interpreters covering 25 languages.

Reciprocal Social Security Agreements

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what new social security agreements have been negotiated and are awaiting implementation with new countries about the introduction of a reciprocal social security agreement;

(2) which countries he is at present in negotiation with about the introduction of a reciprocal social security agreement;

(3) if he will list those countries with whom the United Kingdom has entered into a social security agreement enabling British pensioners living there to receive United Kingdom pension increases in full;

(4) if he will list those countries with whom the United Kingdom has not yet entered into a social security agreement enabling British pensioners living there to receive United Kingdom pension increases in full;

(5) what are the arrangements made for the regular uprating of pensions of British people living in the United States of America;

(6) what are the arrangements made for the regular uprating of pensions of British people living in Malta;

(7) what are the arrangements made for the regular uprating of pensions of British people living in Bermuda;

(8) what are the arrangements made for the regular uprating of pensions of British people living in the Bahamas.

Mr. Scott: The United Kingdom has entered into social security reciprocal agreements which include provision for British pensioners to receive pension increases at upratings with the following countries. Except where the footnote shows otherwise the effect is that pensions are paid at the rate that would have applied had the pensioners remained in the United Kingdom.

Austria
Belgium
Bermuda (1 November 1969)[3]
Cyprus
Denmark[1]
Finland
France
Federal Republic of Germany
Gibraltar
Greece[1]
Iceland
Republic of Ireland
Isle of Man
Israel
Italy
Jamaica (1 October 1972)[3]
Jersey and Guernsey
Luxembourg
Malta
Mauritius (1 November 1981)[3]
Netherlands
Portugal
Sark[2]
Spain
Sweden
Switzerland
Turkey
United States of America (25 September 1969)[3]
Yugoslavia

[1] United Kingdom pensions in Denmark and Greece are paid at unfrozen rates by virtue of EC regulations (1408/71 and 574/72) and not by virtue of reciprocal agreements with the United Kingdom.

[2] United Kingdom pensions in Sark are paid at unfrozen rates by virtue of a separate provision of the Social Security Benefit (Persons Abroad) Regulations 1975.

[3] Increases have been paid only from the dates shown so that increases effective before those dates are not payable.

There are United Kingdom pensioners in some 140 other countries, including the Bahamas, with whom there is no reciprocal agreement enabling pension increases to be paid. There are no new social security agreements already negotiated and awaiting implementation. Negotiations concerning new agreements are in progress with Barbados and the Philippines, and concerning revision of an existing agreement (which does not provide for pension increases to be paid) with Norway.

Blind and Partially Sighted Persons

Ms. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what advantages a person obtains by being included on (a) the blind register and (b) the partially sighted register.

Mr. Scott: A claimant to severe disablement allowance who is registered as blind or partially sighted is automatically accepted as satisfying the 80 per cent. disablement condition. Blindness is a qualification for disablement premium under income support and a person who is blind with additional disabilities may qualify for attendance allowance. People who are registered as blind may also apply for a special income tax allowance, a television licence at reduced cost, free postage on items sent as articles for the blind and certain travel concessions. On the other hand, those who are blind or partially sighted do not need to be registered as such with local authorities before they can be helped by social services departments.

Grants and Loans

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will detail the number of applicants to his Department's local offices in Bradford who since 11 April have been refused (a) grants and (b) loans; and what is the number of those who asked for a grant but were given a loan;

(2) if he will detail the state of the grants and loans budgets for each of his Department's local offices in Bradford for the month since 11 April; and if he will undertake to record and make available this information on a monthly basis.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 6 May 1988 at column 656, where I outlined our plans for providing local office social fund data. Information on the number of those who ask for a grant but are offered a loan is not available.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the repayment arrangements made by the three local offices of his Department in Bradford to applicants who have been given loans since 11 April.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Decision-Making

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific information is available to him via social fund microcomputers; and how he intends to monitor the quality of decision-making undertaking by local office staff.

Mr. Portillo: I will place a note in the Library giving details of the specific information obtained from the microcomputers. The quality of decision-making will be monitored by information obtained from the microcomputers, by the activities of local management, regional office monitoring teams and by independent research.

Transitional Protection Additions

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the number of people receiving transitional protection additions at each local office of his Department in Bradford; if he will provide this information on the basis of each claimant category; and whether the addition is more or less than £10 a week.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Case Reviews

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate how many applicants to the social funds of the local office of his Department in Bradford since 11 April have indicated their intention to take their case to review; and if he will undertake to record, on a monthly basis, the number of applicants taking their cases to the first and second stages of the review process and the outcome of such reviews.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available. Information about applications for review and their outcome will be recorded on local office microcomputers as it becomes available.

Devon Ambulance Services

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what have been the total numbers of ambulances for Devon ambulance services for the past five years.

Mrs. Currie: The total number of ambulances in service for the Devon ambulance service for each of the last five years is as follows:

Financial year	Number of ambulances
1983-84	117
1984-85	119
1985-86	121
1986-87	124
1987-88	120

Ambulances

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department gives on ambulance replacement regarding (a) design and (b) origin of manufacture.

Mrs. Currie: DHSS guidelines to NHS authorities on (a) cover chassis equipment, basic body construction and dimensions, standard equipment facilities and fitments, allowing for modification in the light of local conditions and needs. Ambulance design criteria and replacement policy are currently under review.

On (b) guidelines do not specify requirements as to origin of manufacture. Health authorities are expected to seek best long-term value for money, taking all relevant factors of cost, quality and service into account.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what European Economic Community regulations apply to the purchase or replacement of ambulances.

Mrs. Currie: Directive 77/62/EEC, as amended by directive 80/767/EEC, relates to the co-ordination of procedures for the award of public supply contracts.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services after what mileage an ambulance is replaced.

Mrs. Currie: NHS ambulances are usually replaced after 140,000 miles or seven years. Individual replacement decisions are taken in the light of local usage and circumstances.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services from where ambulances are purchased.

Mrs. Currie: Ambulances currently in use by the NHS have been purchased by competitive tendering from suppliers in the United Kingdom and elsewhere in the European Economic Community. Other sources of supply can be considered on their merits.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many ambulances have been off the road in Devon in the last year and every month in the current year due to lost wheels or half shaft problems.

Mrs. Currie: During 1987, 58 ambulances were taken off the road in Devon due to either lost wheel or half shaft defects. All the vehicles were returned to service by 11 January 1988. The 58 vehicles were withdrawn from service on 30 April 1988 and replacement of these vehicles will be completed by the end of this month.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of ambulances in service for each district health authority for each year since 1983.

Mrs. Currie: The available information, which is given in the table, is not precisely in the form requested. Information is available only centrally by ambulance authority rather than district health authority.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many ambulances have been replaced nationally each year since 1983.

Mrs. Currie: Approximately 850 NHS ambulance vehicles have been replaced annually in the United Kingdom since 1983.

Ambulance Service Pay Claim

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he will make an offer regarding the 1988 ambulance service pay claim.

Mr. Tony Newton: The pay of ambulance officers and control assistants is a matter for negotiation in the ambulance officers' joint negotiating committee, and that of ambulance men and women in the ambulance Whitley Council. I understand that offers which were rejected were made on 15 April and 20 April respectively, and negotiations stand adjourned.

Ancillary Staffs Council Pay Award

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the ancillary staffs council pay award, when agreed, will be entirely funded by his Department.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Shettleston (Mr. Marshall) on Tuesday 10 May 1988 at column 133.

Overseas Pensioners

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether pensioners from Australia, Canada and New Zealand who live within the United Kingdom have their pensions frozen by their respective Governments in the same way as British pensions are frozen.

Mr. Scott: New Zealand superannuation is not payable abroad except during temporary absences. Australian and Canadian pensions payable to pensioners living in the United Kingdom are not frozen by their respective Governments but entitlement for those living abroad is restricted in other ways. Australian old age pensions are awarded only to people who claim while permanently resident in Australia. Canadian old-age security pensions are payable outside Canada, other than during temporary absences, only to people who have resided in Canada for at least 20 years after the age of 18 (compared with a residence requirement of 10 years for those living in Canada).

Hounslow and Spelthorne District Health Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will call for a report from Hounslow and Spelthorne district health authority over the sponsorship of Kempton races to pay for staff salaries.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the sponsorship of Kempton park races was connected with a charitable appeal towards upgrading the buildings and buying more modern equipment at Ashford and West Middlesex hospitals. There is a long-standing tradition of such support for the Health Service, for which we are most grateful. I hope everyone concerned enjoyed their day.

Correspondence

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if an answer will now be provided to the letter to the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, the hon. Member for Enfield, Southgate, (Mr. Portillo), reference PO(5)1508/8, dated 22 February and written by Mr. J. M. Hamilton of 58 Woodlands lane, Shirley, Solihull.

Mr. Portillo: A reply was sent to Mr. Hamilton on 10 May.

National Childbirth Trust

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date he received an application from the National Childbirth Trust for Department of Health and Social Security section 64 grant for an average of £62,000 for each of the next three years; and when he expects to make a decision upon the application.

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hampstead and Highgate (Sir G. Finsberg) on 27 April at columns 177-78.

Quest for a Test for Cancer

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on what date an expert panel considered an application for funding from Quest for a Test for Cancer for a wide clinical trial due to start in January 1988; on what date the panel made a decision upon the application; when the National Health Services procurement directorate knew of the panel's decision; and when it was communicated to the applicant.

Mrs. Currie: The expert panel chaired by the Department's chief scientist, Professor O'Grady, met on 26 February 1988 to review some 13 applications for research funding on a similar theme and made recommendations the same day. This included a recommendation that the project to which the hon. Member refers should not, as submitted, be funded by the Department. However, the Department contacted the applicant on 15 April to discuss a new proposal for further collaborative work with a view to commercial exploitation of the screening method involved.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the change in the real value of child benefit since its introduction.

Mr. Scott: Child benefit was phased in between April 1977 and April 1979. The value of child benefit at April 1987 was 96·7 per cent. of its value at April 1979, based on the movement in the general index of retail prices during that period.

Abortion Act 1967

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will establish an independent and representative body to review the workings of the Abortion Act 1967 and to make recommendations.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. The main issues raised by abortion have been considered on a number of occasions, most recently by the House of Lords Select Committee on the Infant Life (Preservation) Bill, which reported earlier this year.

NHS Hospitals (Cost)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, further to the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 3 May, Official Report, column 350, what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards seeking private contributions towards the capital costs of National Health Service hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said in her reply to the hon. Member, we welcome the support for the health services provided in a number of ways by such private contributions.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the answer of 6 May, Official Report, columns 628-44, to the hon. Member for Epping Forest (Sir J. Biggs-Davison) he will list those objectives in the field of policy for disabled persons and their carers which Her Majesty's Government have not fulfilled.

Mr. Scott: Government objectives are to respond to the needs of disabled people and to encourage their increased independence and integration into society. The Government aim to improve the targeting of assistance to them in order to enable this to happen. Since 1979, we have increased spending on benefits for the long-term sick and disabled by over 80 per cent. in real terms, or by about £3 billion. This year we are spending an extra £60 million on 270,000 sick and disabled claimants through the disability premium, and a further £8 million for claimants eligible for the severe disability premium. We have also set aside £5 million for the Independent Living Fund to provide help to severely disabled people which will enable them to live independently in the community. We recognise the importance of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986. The Act is being progressively implemented in a properly planned way, in co-operation with the service providers.

Pathology Laboratories

Mr. Terry Davis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether any discussions have taken place between representatives of the Government and representatives of the Hospital Corporation of America, the American Medical International, National Medical Enterprises and the Humana Corporation about the privatisation of pathology laboratories in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No.

District Health Authority Plans

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what procedures govern the re-submission for consultation of district health authority plans which have been approved but not implemented.

Mrs. Currie: There are no specific formal procedures to govern the situation indicated by the hon. Member. Statute requires health authorities to consult community health councils over individual proposals for substantial changes in services.

Coventry Churches Housing Association

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what undertakings Coventry Churches housing association has given under its agreement with Coventry district health authority as a condition for the use of the Whitley hospital site to provide the equivalent full hospital care for its patients.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that only those patients who do not require full consultant oversight in NHS hospital facilities will be considered for transfer, under arrangements currently being drawn up, to the care of the Coventry Churches housing association.

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make available to right hon. and hon. Members the documents which define the detailed patient hospital care requirement of the Coventry Churches housing association as a condition of its use of the Coventry Whitley hospital site.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the patient care policy document, which will form part of a legally binding agreement between Coventry health authority and the Coventry Churches housing association, is currently being put in final form. The document will be available shortly and I will ensure that the hon. Member receives a copy and that a further copy is placed in the Library.

Coventry (GPs)

Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many Coventry citizens were denied permanent practitioner placement in the last year for which figures are available;

(2) how many Coventry citizens had been denied a permanent practitioner placement after complaining of a doctor's misconduct in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: I regret the information requested is not held centrally. I refer the hon. Member to Coventry family practitioner committee which may be able to provide it. It is, however, the case that where a patient has difficulty in finding a doctor who will accept him on his list, the FPC is empowered to assign that patient to a doctor's list.

NHS Properties

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when the target to have 70 per cent. of all National Health Service properties in an adequate position was set.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 11 May 1988]: The target was set in July 1985.

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to his answer of 5 May, Official Report, column 549, he will identify the 2 per cent. of National Health Service property not currently held to be in an adequate condition but which it is intended to improve; what plans have been made to ensure that it is in an adequate condition with the estimated dates of completion; and if he will give the estimated cost of each such scheme.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 11 May 1988]: The National Health Service estate comprises some 12,000 major sites and each site may have several buildings. Centrally we do not collect information about the condition of each building. It is for individual health authorities to identify and remedy particular deficiencies as part of their ongoing estate management functions. In 1985-86 64 per cent. and in 1986-87 68 per cent. of the property was in adequate condition. If that trend continues we can expect the NHS to have achieved the 70 per cent. target during 1987-88. The figures for 1987-88 will not be available before February 1989.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Kampuchea

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance he has made available in the past year to alleviate the present food shortage and public health problems in Kampuchea; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: We have provided no assistance directly to Cambodia but are ready to consider contributing humanitarian assistance in the context of an internationally organised relief effort.

Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list British contributions to the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference for each year since its formation.

Mrs. Chalker: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Overseas Development gave her on 3 March, at column 646.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will list the level of British bilateral aid to each of the member states of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference for each year from 1979 to 1987;

(2) if he will list the level of British bilateral aid to each of the member states of the Southern African Development Co-ordination Conference for each year from 1979 to 1987 inclusive, at 1987 prices.

Mrs. Chalker: Gross bilateral aid to SADCC countries was as follows:

Developing Countries (Statistics)

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing such information as he has for each developing country on (a) the infant mortality rate, (b) the level of external debt, (c) the net flow of capital in 1986-87 and (d) the percentage change in terms of trade with the United Kingdom on the previous year.

Mrs. Chalker: Information on question (d) could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The answers to questions (a), (b) and (c) are as follows:

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Rainbow Warrior

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to his French counterpart about the premature release of Alain Mofart and Dominique Prieur from Hao in connection with their part in the sinking of the Rainbow Warrior.

Mrs. Chalker: None. This is a matter between France and New Zealand.

Swiss Company Law

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will seek the assistance of the European Commission and Council of Ministers in obtaining satisfactory assurances from the Swiss Government about reforms in their company law and practice.

Mr. Mellor: There have been no representations on this specific issue, but discussions between the Community and EFTA countries cover a wide range of trade issues, including the impact of the single market 1992 campaign.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Cambridgeshire Police

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the chief constable's estimate for optimum operational manning levels for police, by division, in Cambridgeshire; how actual manning levels differ from these; what were the statistics for call-outs and completed operations for the Cambridgeshire constabulary underwater unit in each of the last five years; and when he expects to respond to the chief constable's request for increased police manning levels in Cambridgeshire.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend intends to announce shortly his decisions on applications for police manpower which we have received from Cambridgshire police authority and from other authorities. The manning levels of the force at present, and as they would be on completion of their proposed programme of increases, is set out in the table, as is the number of operations in which the force underwater unit has been involved.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will take steps to increase the resources and the powers, respectively, of the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. John Patten: The Commission for Racial Equality is reviewing, with officials, the resources which it needs to carry out its functions.

There is no immediate prospect of new general race relations legislation, though specific amendments to enhance the commission's powers are made from time to time. For example, an undertaking has been given to consider an amendment to the Housing Bill to give the commission a statutory power to make codes of practice in relation to housing. In addition, the Policy Studies Institute has been commissioned to carry out a study of the effectiveness of existing legislation including the commission's powers, in respect of employment.

Safer Cities Initiative

Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made with the safer cities initiative announced earlier in the current year.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Brightside (Mr. Blunkett) on 4 May, at column 448.

Asylum

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give the sources of the figure quoted by the hon. Member for Mid-Sussex (Mr. Renton) in replying to the debate on new clause 2 of the Immigration Bill that West Germany has some 800,000 outstanding applications for asylum, Official Report column 882, 16 February, in the light of official figures released by the Federal Republic of Germany's Federal Agency for the Recognition of Foreign Refugees showing that, at the end of December 1987, there were 51,561 outstanding applications for asylum involving 81,725 individuals in the Federal Republic of Germany; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The source of the figure, which should have been 700,000, was a report issued on 12 August 1987 by the London embassy of the Federal Republic of Germany. This account was overtaken by a survey published in February this year by the Federal Interior Ministry giving a similar figure as the total number of refugees and displaced persons living in West Germany, and saying that of these 165,000 were asylum seekers whose applications were still pending. The point made in the debate therefore still stands.

Wiltshire Constabulary

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will set up an inquiry under the Police Act 1964 into the alleged racist behaviour of certain members of Wiltshire constabulary in the arrest of Eric Maximen at West Wells road, Corsham, Wiltshire on 23 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. Procedures exist under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 for the investigation of allegations that individual police officers may have committed a criminal or a disciplinary offence. The circumstances of Mr. Maximen's arrest are already being investigated by the Wiltshire constabulary in accordance with these procedures, following complaints lodged by three members of the public. When the investigation has been completed the papers will be referred to the Police Complaints Authority and, if appropriate, to the Director of Public Prosecutions.

Neighbourhood Watch

Mr. Andy Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether there has been a reduction in residential burglary in areas where the number of neighbourhood watch schemes has increased.

Mr. John Patten: Residential burglary offences recorded by police in England and Wales in 1987 were 4·5 per cent. down on those for 1986. It is interesting to note that this welcome decrease in the numbers of burglaries has taken place as the number of neighbourhood watch schemes has increased. Examples include:

	North West Schemes		Residential Burglary Percentage Change

Mr. Wheeler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how the results of the evaluation of two neighourhood watch schemes in London, carried out by Dr. Trevor Bennett, have affected the development of neighbourhood watch, and what further research he has commissioned.

Mr. John Patten: Dr. Bennett's research, together with the results of studies from other areas, confirmed our view that the effectiveness of a neighbourhood watch scheme depends greatly on the quality of its organisation, and the degree of commitment which it is able to obtain from local people. A well-run scheme can contribute to a reduction in crime rates and the fear of crime, and can help greatly to improve relations between the police and the general public. But it is not a panacea.

In the 12 months since the results of Dr. Bennett's evaluation were made public we have been active in stimulating further research and ensuring that what we learn is fed back to those who can make most use of it.

We funded Dr. S. Hussain, of the University of Southampton, to carry out a questionnaire survey of neighbourhood watch co-ordinators covering nine provincial police force areas. A report on this work was published on 30 March 1988 as Home Office "Crime Prevention Unit Paper 12," copies of which are available in the Library. This report described the way in which neighbourhood watch schemes were established, the areas in which they were located, how they operated and the extent of police involvement. Although it did not consider the effect of neighbourhood watch on crime rates, it did provide some evidence of a positive effect on police—public relations.

In line with our view that schemes need to be tailored to local circumstances, we have funded a study in Rochdale on an estate of approximately 2,000 dwellings. This initiative involved the establishment of watch schemes centred on the victims of crime and the results show a 60 per cent. reduction in domestic burglary. A report is being prepared for publication in early summer. The initiative is continuing with the support of the Home Office and the local police and probation services.

The Home Office is also involved in an initiative on a high crime estate in Lambeth. This project, which is being developed in collaboration with the local victim support group, will encourage neighbourhood watch type activities, as appropriate, throughout the estate. Results will be evaluated in terms of crime reduction. A crime and crime prevention survey has been completed on the estate and a report of this survey will be available by autumn 1988. A report on the full impact of any crime prevention measures taken is unlikely to be available before early 1990.

The 1988 British crime survey, funded by the Home Office, includes a number of questions on neighbourhood watch. This survey will give information on how many people have heard of neighbourhood watch and how many people have schemes in their immediate area. It will also provide information on why some householders have not joined schemes in their area, what scheme members actually do, what advantages and disadvantages there are, how schemes operate and how many are still active.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there are in Ealing, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that there are 100 neighbourhood watch schemes in Ealing involving some 47,000 dwellings, which represents 74 per cent. of households. Some 60 per cent. of the total crime in the Ealing division occurs in the areas not covered by neighbourhood watch.

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the increase in the numbers of neighbourhood watch schemes and recent research results; and what assessment he has made of the prospects for developing neighbourhood watch in the next two to three years.

Mr. John Patten: The growth in neighbourhood watch is heartening since each scheme reflects the willingness of the public to work with the police to tackle crime. It must be remembered. however, that neighbourhood watch is comparatively new to this country and there are still lessons to learn. Research and innovatory police schemes are to be welcomed therefore particularly where they help identify which factors make for the success or lack of success of individual schemes. The next step is for practitioners developing neighbourhood watch to keep abreast of good practice and ensure that the schemes for which they are responsible are finely tuned to meet local needs and suit local circumstances. We hope to publish a guidance note on best practice later this year.

Mr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the operation of neighbourhood watch in the Wimbledon area has been reviewed in the light of the evaluation by Dr. Trevor Bennett, made public in May 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: A review of neighbourhood watch schemes in the Wimbledon area was carried out by the Metropolitan police in November 1987. This revealed that 85 per cent. of the schemes were working well. As police crime figures in the Wimbledon district do not relate directly to the areas of individual neighbourhood watch schemes, the indicator used for the review was the level of active communication between the scheme co-ordinators and the police.

Mr. Goodson-Wickes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many neighbourhood watch schemes there are in the Wimbledon area; and whether the number of residential burglaries has increased or decreased since they were introduced.

Mr. John Patten: There are now 131 neighbourhood watch schemes in the Wimbledon division, covering some 43,832 households. Figures for the division as a whole show that burglaries have dropped by 18·6 per cent. since the introduction of neighbourhood watch. This welcome reduction has taken place during a time when increased police-community interaction, encouraged by the existence of neighbourhood watch, has fostered a greater willingness on the part of the public to report crimes to the police.

Ealing (Crime)

Sir George Young: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis about crime in Ealing in 1986 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that overall crime in the Ealing division in 1987 was 7 per cent. down on that for 1986. There was an increase in arrests of 13 per cent. and the total of crimes cleared up increased by 22 per cent. Residential burglaries dropped by 9 per cent. and there was a 27 per cent. increase in arrests for this offence.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Japanese Language Courses

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans his Department has to ensure the wider provision of Japanese language courses geared to the needs of United Kingdom exporting industries.

Mr. Jackson: The Government attach a great deal of importance to the need to ensure that provision for the learning of Japanese, as well as other languages, is available to meet the requirements of commerce and industry. As regards the universities, the University Grants Committee has accepted the recommendations of the Parker report and is making additional resources available. In addition, five centres within the network of language export training centres, funded through the Department's professional industrial and commercial updating programme and the MSC, are able to provide training to exporters for the Japanese market and there are plans to enhance the provision. The Department of Education and Science is in consultation with the Department of Trade and Industry on these and related matters.

Premature Births

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on on-going research projects into the effects of advancing medical science on the ability of premature infants to be born alive either (a) in the United Kingdom or (b) abroad; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I understand that the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through this Department, is funding a considerable amount of work in the field of prenatal and neonatal medicine. In 1986-87, the last financial year for which figures are available, the council spent £4·6 million on this research.

City Technical Colleges

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all plans and propositions of which he is aware for the establishment of city technical colleges, with details in each case of (a) the foundation, trusts or individuals supporting the proposition; (b) the number of pupils for whom the school will cater; (c) the amount of (i) private funds, and (ii) maximum Exchequer contribution to (x) capital establishment, and set-up costs and (y) running costs; (d) the planned date of opening; (e) whether the proposition involves a change in character of an existing school; and (f) the address of the proposed school.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The full details requested are available in respect of only the Kingshurst and Nottingham CTCs and are as follows:

the principal sponsors are Hanson plc and Lucas Industries at Kingshurst and Mr. Harry Djanogly at Nottingham. Each college will provide for about 1,000 pupils; for the Kingshurst CTC the estimated capital cost of acquiring the site and adapting part of the existing buildings is £3·45 million, £1 million of which was contributed by Hanson plc. Additional capital costs, which have not yet been determined, will also be shared between the Department and the Kingshurst CTC Trust. The Kingshurst CTC Trust expects to raise at least £1 million for this purpose;

the cash limit for capital expenditure on the Nottingham CTC is £9·05 million; £1·4 million has already been raised by the private sector;

the normal running costs of CTCs will be met by Exchequer grant; it is for sponsors to decide whether to make additional sums available to CTCs;

Kingshurst will open in September 1988, Nottingham in September 1989. Both colleges are entirely new establishments and involve no "change of character" by existing schools; their addresses are the Kingshurst CTC, PO Box 1017, Cooks Lane, Kingshurst, Birmingham B37 6NZ and the Nottingham CTC, Sherwood Rise, New Basford, Nottingham.

Dixons plc, the Philip and Pauline Harris Trust, the Mercers Company and Thamesmead Town have each announced plans to provide sponsorship of at least £1 million towards three more CTCs. I am not yet in a position to give details of the locations or the division of capital expenditure.

The CTC Trust has acquired a site for a CTC in Middlesbrough: there and elsewhere detailed discussions are taking place with a number of prospective sponsors who are not yet ready to declare their hand but who are committed in principle to provide financial support of at least £1 million.

I am also aware of other bodies which have expressed an interest but which have not made a direct approach to the Department. It would be inappropriate to name the bodies until such an approach is made.

Contract Researchers

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he intends to publish copies of the report commissioned by the Advisory Board for the Research Councils from the Institute of Manpower Studies, on contract researchers employed in universities and polytechnics.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: A report on contract researchers in universities, prepared by the IMS, was published by the ABRC last year. I understand that the board will be considering the report of a subsequent survey of such staff (also commissioned from the IMS), and the possibility of publishing this, at its next meeting.

Mr. J. C. Corbacho

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he will answer the letter written to him on 17 March by the hon. Member for Birkenhead, regarding the case of Mr. J. C. Corbacho.

Mrs. Rumbold: I replied to the hon. Member on 11 May. I apologise for the delay in replying.

DEFENCE

Sea Harriers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he expects approval will be given for airframe modifications to the Sea Harrier FRS1 to enable uprating to FRS2 standard with Blue Vixen radar and advanced medium range air-to-air missiles; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: Later this year.

R and D (Royalties)

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements are made for royalties to be paid to Her Majesty's Government when products developed as a result of publicly funded military research and development are exported.

Mr. Sainsbury: When the Ministry funds the development of products which are sold subsequently to third parties, arrangements exist for a commercial exploitation levy to be paid. In general the Ministry encourages the sale of such products and the levy is normally based either on profit sharing arrangements, or, for low-value sales, on a percentage of the net selling price.

Air Combat Manoeuvring

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions in each of the past five years Royal Air Force personnel have made use of the air combat manoeuvring facilities at (a) Decimomannu, Sardinia and (b) Nellis air force base, Nevada.

Mr. Freeman: It would not be possible to provide the information requested without disproportionate effort.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the annual cost to the Government in each of the past five years of using the air combate manoeuvring facilities at (a) Decimomannu, Sardinia and (b) Nellis air force base, Nevada.

Mr. Freeman: The cost to Her Majesty's Government in each of the past five years for using the air combat manoeuvring facilities at Decimomannu, Sardinia and Nellis air force base, Nevada was:

£000

Year	Decimommannu	Nellis
1983-84	518	132
1984-85	450	361
1985-86	793	139
1986-87	409	267
1987-88	441	252

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a breakdown of the typical costs involved in British Royal Air Force personnel and aircraft making use of the air combat manoeuvring facilities at (a) Decimommannu, Sardinia and (b) Nellis air force base, Nevada.

Mr. Freeman: The cost breakdown sought would require an analysis of expenditures which are not separately identified at this would involve disproportionate effort.

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Andrew Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much and what resources have been invested in the search and rescue facilities based at RAF Leuchars in recent years; and when he expects to make a statement about its future.

Mr. Freeman: The accommodation presently occupied by the RAF Leuchars search and rescue (SAR) flight cost some £1·6 million, of which 97 per cent. is expected to be funded by NATO. This accommodation is not unique or specific to SAR activities. A statement about the final disposition of military SAR helicopters in the United Kingdom is expected to be made in the near future.

Pearce v. Secretary of State for Defence

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of his Department's appeal to the House of Lords on 28 April against the Court of Appeal's ruling on 31 July 1987 in the case of Pearce v. Secretary of State for Defence.

The Attorney-General: I have been asked to reply.

Costs were awarded against the Department and the final figure is not yet available. The Department's own legal expenses were about £7,000.

PRIME MINISTER

Northern Ireland (Deaths)

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Prime Minister if she can now reply to the letter dated 14 April from the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North on the figures for deaths in the current disturbances in Northern Ireland.

The Prime Minister: I replied to the hon. Member yesterday.

WALES

Rating Reform

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his reply of 6 May to the hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy), Official Report, columns 597-98, if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the estimated community charge and the average rate bill in each authority for units of (a) one adult, (b) two adults, (c) three adults and (d) four adults.

Mr. Peter Walker: Estimates of the total of the community charges payable in households with different numbers of adults can be obtained by multiplying the illustrative community charge figures, given in the reply of 6 May by my hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Torfaen (Mr. Murphy), by the number of adults in the household. Information on which to base comparable estimates of average domestic rate bills for such households is not available.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

National Engineering Laboratory, East Kilbride

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list the private companies which have been consulted on the provision of the security services at the national engineering laboratory, East Kilbride.

Mr. Butcher: Preliminary consultations on the provision of security services at the national engineering laboratory have been with the following companies:

Centuryan Security
Group 4 Total Security Ltd.
Honeywell Protection Services
Securicor
Strathclyde Security Services.

Companies (Takeover Bids)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will take steps to prevent bids being made to take over United Kingdom companies by foreign companies who are protected in their own countries by laws and other devices prohibiting reciprocal action; what representations he has received from Cadbury Schweppes seeking such action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In considering whether a merger or proposed merger should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission both the Director General of Fair Trading and the Secretary of State take into account all relevant aspects of the case. One consideration which may be relevant in some cases is the extent to which United Kingdom companies have reciprocal freedom to acquire companies based in the home country of the prospective acquirer.

I have received no representations from Cadbury Schweppes on the issue of reciprocity.

Rowntree plc

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many representations have been received by his Department about the future of Rowntree plc.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: At close of business on 11 May 1988 some 30 representations had been received.

Mergers (EC Proposals)

Mr. Devlin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether he is supporting the inclusion of a public interest criterion in the European Community proposals for assessment of mergers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The United Kingdom Government have reserved their position on the European Commission's proposal for a Community merger control regulation pending further discussions with the Commission of a number of points, including that relating to a possible public interest criterion.

Companies (American Investment)

Mr. Batiste: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the level of capital investment by United Kingdom companies in the United States of America since 1983.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The only available information relates to direct investment overseas by United Kingdom companies. In the four years 1983 to 1986, net outward investment by United Kingdom companies in the USA totalled £14,393 million in cash terms. A breakdown of this figure is contained in table 4 (page 26) of the article "Overseas Direct Investment 1986" in British Business, 11 March 1988, a copy of which is in the Library.

Companies (Swiss Investment)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is his estimate of the level of capital investment by United Kingdom companies in Switzerland since 1983.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The only available information relates to direct investment overseas by United Kingdom companies. In the four years 1983 to 1986, there was a total net reduction of £211 million in cash terms in investment by United Kingdom companies in Switzerland. A breakdown of this figure is contained in table 4 (page 26) of the article "Overseas Direct Investment 1986" in British Business, 11 March 1988, a copy of which is in the Library.

Internal Market Council

Mr. Richard Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will report on the Internal Market Council held on 3 May.

Mr. Maude: The Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, adopted directives on the safety of toys, the type approval of tractors, and trade in sliced bovine livers. It adopted a regulation extending current arrangements for the movement within the Community of goods sent from one member state for temporary use in one or more other member states.

The Council also discussed proposed directives on the mutual recognition of higher education diplomas and on right of residence throughout the Community for EC nationals not already covered by the treaty of Rome.

Deregulation (Advisory Panel)

Mr. Richard Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the current membership of the advisory panel on deregulation, and when he will be appointing new members.

Mr. Maude: Three new members have been appointed today. They are:

Mrs. Teresa Graham — Senior Manager with Price Waterhouse.
Mr. Stephen Moss—Director, Grosvenor Securities Ltd. and Drakes Restaurant
Mr. Tom O'Connor—Chairman, Elta Plastics Ltd.

The existing membership of the advisory panel on deregulation is as follows:

Mr. Brian Adgey — Managing Director, James Anderson Ltd.
Mr. Brian Crack — Managing Director, Merricks Sico Ltd.
Mr. Colin Dauris — Chairman and Managing Director, James Dauris and Co. Ltd.
Mr. Robert Fleeman — Director, Smaller Business Advisory Services Ltd. and Directors' and Staffs' Advisory Services.
Mr. George Gray—Chairman and Managing Director, Valley Capital Ltd. and Rural Development Commissioner.
Mr. Damon de Laszlo—Chairman, Harwin Ltd.
Mr. Clive Parritt—Managing Partner, Howard Tilly and

Co. Chartered Accountants.
Mr. Phillip White — Chairman and Chief Executive, WYKO Group plc

The advisory panel has made a useful contribution to the enterprise and deregulation unit's work by advising it on the impact of regulatory requirements on business and enterprise development. I recently met members of the advisory panel and I should like to express my gratitude to them for all their work. These new appointments will help to ensure their continuing effectiveness as a source of valuable advice.

Animal Imports

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, if he will list by (a) species, (b) origin of pelt and (c) method of slaughter of animal for import for each year since 1983.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 12 May 1988]: The "Overseas Trade Statistics" identified raw skins and furskins by certain species. Information on the method of slaughter is not available. The following raw fur skins have been imported consistently throughout the period from the listed countries:

(a) Sheep and Lambs skins: New Zealand, Irish Republic, Australia, Ethiopia and South Africa;

(b) Mink: USSR, China, Netherlands, Denmark, Finland and USA;

(c) Persian, Astrakhan, Caracul and similar lambs, or Indian, Chinese, Mongolian, and Tibetan lambs: Namibia, Afghanistan and South Africa;

(d) Sea-otters, Nutria and Beaver: Poland;

(e) Musk-rats and marmots: Canada and USA.

The remaining identified species, with their major countries of origin, are given in the table:

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Goats and kids skins	Uganda Kenya Ethiopia Netherlands China	Nigeria Uganda Kenya	Kenya Uganda Ethiopia	Kenya Uganda Ethiopia	Nigeria Uganda

Wild felines	USA	USSR Mongolia	Denmark China USA Canada	German Democratic Republic China USA Canada	Irish Republic Nigeria

Insider Trading

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he has any plans to introduce further legislation to tackle insider trading.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 3 May 1988]: Some of the proposals to amend investigation powers which were announced by my right hon. and noble Friend the Secretary of State on 11 May 1988 concern insider dealing. Apart from these proposals, we have no present plans to introduce further legislation to tackle insider dealing. We do, however, keep the present legislation under review.

ENVIRONMENT

Horse Breeding Studs

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to decide on the liability for rating of horse breeding studs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I expect this matter to arise during consideration of the Local Government Finance Bill in the House of Lords. My right hon. Friend intends to reach a decision on this matter in the light of the debate there.

Rating Reform

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his latest estimates of the changes which will be required in numbers of staff employed by local authorities to deal with domestic rate collection on the implementation of the Local Government Finance Bill.

Mr. Howard: It is for local authorities to estimate the number of staff they will need. Staffing will be one of the issues addressed in the Price Waterhouse study on implementation of the community charge . We expect to receive this report shortly.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation specifically to prohibit any information collected for police purposes being disclosed to a community charge officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) on 5 May, at column 569.

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the average household rate payment in the London borough of Greenwich for 1988-89; and what is his estimate of a community charge based on the same level of expenditure.

Mr. Howard: I hope to be able to publish 1988-89 illustrative community charges for all authorities shortly. However, I do not yet have a budget return from the London borough of Greenwich.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the level of community charge for spending at needs assessment which would apply in 1988-89 if the proposed local government finance system were in operation; and what assumptions are made to arrive at that answer.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 9 May 1988]: I hope to be able to publish these figures with full exemplifications for 1988-89 shortly. These estimates are dependent on local authority budget figures. More than 150 authorities have changed the budget figures on which AMA exemplifications were based, seven by more than £1 million.

Mobile Homes (Sale)

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, in the light of increasing accommodation prices, he will consider making a reduction in the percentage commission payable to a site owner upon the sale of a mobile home.

Mrs. Roe: We have no plans to alter the present rate of commission set at 10 per cent. by the Mobile Homes (Commission) Order 1983.

Water Rates

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding lost revenue arising from the recent rating appeal in the case of Severn Trent water authority v. Cakebread; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: We have received a number of representations regarding the way in which losses of rate income are dealt with in the block grant system. The local authority associations have sought a meeting with the Department to discuss the matter, and we shall consider all the representations we have received when that meeting has taken place.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he proposes to take arising from the outcome of the recent rating appeal in the case of Severn Trent water authority v. Cakebread.

Mr. Howard: As my right hon. Friend announced on 9 March, we shall be tabling amendments to the Local Government Finance Bill that will have the effect of restoring the law to what it was understood to be before the Court of Appeal's decision.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will publish a breakdown of housing expenditure by household type, income and region to identify (a) gross rates and (b) net rates separately from the family expenditure survey 1986.

Mr. Roe: The sample size in the family expenditure survey is not large enough to give meaningful figures for the breakdown requested.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) whether he will publish a breakdown of housing expenditure by household type and income identifying (a) gross rates and (b) net rates separately as in table 11 in the family expenditure survey 1986;

(2) whether he will publish a breakdown of housing expenditure to identify (a) gross rates and (b) net rates by region for each type of tenure as in table 29 of the family expenditure survey 1986.

Mrs. Roe: I shall write to the hon. Member with the information as soon as possible.

UNESCO World Heritage Sites

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what action is being taken by him to ensure the preservation of United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation world heritage sites in the United Kingdom;

(2) how many world heritage sites, as defined by the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organisation, there are in the United Kingdom; and if he will list them.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 12 May 1988]: There are 11 world heritage sites in the United Kingdom as follows:

Durham Cathedral and Castle.
Fountains Abbey and St. Mary's, Studley Royal.
The castles and town walls of Edward I in Gwynedd.
Ironbridge Gorge.
Stonehenge, Avebury and Associated Sites.
St. Kilda.
Giant's Causeway and Causeway Coast.
Blenheim Palace.
Palace of Westminster and Westminster Abbey.
City of Bath.
Hadrian's Wall Military Zone.

Before accepting a site for inclusion on the world heritage list satisfactory arrangements need to be made for continuing maintenance and protection. If the hon. Member is concerned about a particular site and would care to write to me with details, I would be happy to comment more fully.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Oil Industry

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the oil industry regarding the harmonisation of excise and value added tax rates on petrol and other transport fuels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations.

Financial Reports

Mr. Allen: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government have yet examined the proposals of the Public Accounts Committee on financial reports to Parliament; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Major: The Government's proposals on financial reporting to Parliament, in response to the eighth report of 1986-87 of the Committee of Public Accounts (HC 98), and to the second report of 1987-88 of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee (HC 22), were sent to the respective Committees on 29 April and were published on Friday 6 May—Cm 375.

Venture Capital

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what was the level of venture capital invested on a regional basis for each financial year from 1979 to 1988;

(2) what was the level of venture capital invested in the counties of Cleveland, Cumbria, Durham, Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, East Sussex, Kent, Surrey and West Sussex for each financial year since 1979-80.

Mr. Major: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Housing (Government Support)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing changes in the provision of Government financial support, including tax incentives, to public and private sector housing respectively, in Scotland, Wales and each region of England.

Mr. Major: The table shows voted expenditure on housing for the years 1978-79 and 1988-89 for the public and private sectors. It includes both public and non-public expenditure.

	1978-79 (outturn) £ million	1988-89 (provision) £ million

Public	1,108	459
Scotland
Private	41	211
Public	178	81
Wales
Private	14	81
Public	74	73

A regional breakdown of the figures for England is not available. Regional figures for mortgage interest tax relief for the year 1978-79 can be provided and these are detailed in the following table, but, following the introduction of the MIRAS system in April 1983, regional information can no longer be provided. The United Kingdom figure for 1988-89 mortgage interest tax relief is expected to be £4,250 million.

London Weighting

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to the Exchequer of paying London weighting to those civil servants located in (a) the intermediate zone and (b) the outer London zone, who are in receipt of such weighting over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The estimated cost to the Exchequer of paying London weighting to those civil servants in the intermediate London zone and the outer London zone, over the last five financial years has been:

	Intermediate London zone, £ million	Outer London zone, £ million
1983-84	15·7	11·7
1984-85	15·8	13·3
1985-86	16·6	13·0
1986-87	18·3	13·7
1987-88	19·3	14·4

This excludes the knock-on effects on earnings-related national insurance contributions, superannuation and pensions.

Consumer Expenditure

Mr. Butler: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, pursuant to his answer of 28 April, Official Report, columns 259-60, he will provide a table showing consumer expenditure estimates for the years 1983 to 1987 at constant prices.

Mr. Major: The information requested is as follows:

CIVIL SERVICE

Petitions

Mr. Allen: To ask the Minister for the Civil Service if he will ensure that all parliamentary petitions presented by right hon. and hon. Members, which currently receive a standard format reply to the effect that the Department concerned has no observation to make, in future receive a full response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: In accordance with Standing Order No. 135, departmental observations in reply to petitions are not obligatory. It is accordingly for the appropriate Minister or Ministers concerned to decide whether any such observations are called for in response to a particular petition.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Overseas Pensioners

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the numbers of British pensioners living overseas who do not receive pension upratings; and if he will list those three countries with the largest numbers of such deprived pensioners.

Mr. Scott: In December 1987 there were 278,928 British pensioners living overseas who were not entitled to receive pension upratings. The three countries with the largest numbers of such pensioners were Australia, Canada and New Zealand.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 20 countries in the world with the largest number of British people in receipt of pensions together with the numbers at present resident in each country.

Mr. Scott: The 20 countries in the world with the largest number of British people in receipt of pensions (including widows' benefits) together with the numbers of pensioners resident in each country in December 1987 are as follows:

	Number of pensioners
Australia	117,659
Canada	76,152
Republic of Ireland	49,259
United States of America	41,860
New Zealand	27,957
South Africa	25,273

India	3,334
Cyprus	2,848
Austria	2,462
Poland	2,445

Benefit Entitlement (Immigrants)

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will outline the criteria for entitlement of immigrants to the United Kingdom to supplementary benefit, family income supplement and housing benefit under current regulations.

Mr. Scott: Income support (which replaced supplementary benefit from 11 April 1988) and housing benefit are fully available to all who have a right of abode in this country, and to all—including refugees—who have been accepted for settlement here. People who are admitted to the UK for temporary purposes, such as holiday visitors, business men, work permit holders, and students are generally admitted on the basis that they will not have recourse to public funds. Asylum seekers and others seeking permanent leave to remain are entitled to income support, urgent cases payments and housing benefit.

There are no separate criteria for immigrants in family credit (which replaced family income supplement from 11 April 1988). The rules for all claimants are that, at the time of claim, they must be present and ordinarily resident in Great Britain.

Deaf Children

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will take steps to improve the information health authorities make available to the parents of deaf children with special educational needs;

(2) what representations he has received from the National Deaf Children's Society about deaf children, health authorities and the Education Act 1981; what reply he has sent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: I recently received a report from the National Deaf Children's Society about the responsibilities of health authorities under the Education Act 1981 in regard to the special education needs of deaf children. The report is being studied and I will respond to the society in due course.

Pay Increases

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the percentage change in the period from 1975 to 31 March 1988 in the pay increases received by (a) medical physicists and clinical biochemists (b) medical physics technicians, (c) medical laboratory scientific officers, (d) radiographers and (e) radiologists; and what was the percentage change over the same period in the retail price index and in average earnings;

(2) what was the percentage change in each year since 1975 for the pay increases received by (a) medical physicists, (b) medical physics technicians, (c) medical laboratory scientific officers, (d) radiographers and (e) radiologists; and what were the percentage changes in each year since 1975 in the retail prices index and in average earnings.

Mr. Newton: The available information is given in the table. The settlement levels recorded in the table are not directly comparable with changes in the average earnings index for the same period because the index includes not only the effect of pay settlements but earnings arising from changes in overtime working, increments,, and payments-by-results.

Notes:

[1] The increase in the average earnings index (AEI) for 1975-76 is based upon the 'Old Series—All Industries and Services', while subsequent years are based upon the 'New Series—Whole Economy' indices.

[2] Settlements for these groups in these years cannot be expressed as a single percentage figure because of staging, variations in timing and the inclusion of flat-rate weekly cash increases with pay threshholds or pay supplements.

[3] Staged award, final part paid with effect from 1 April 1980.

[4] Two year agreement, implemented in single stage in September 1982.

[5] Staged award, final part paid with effect from 1 February 1986.

[6] The increase in the retail prices index (RPI) is from July 1975 to March 1988, and the average earnings index is from July 1975 to February 1988 (provisional) 'New Series'—the latest month available.

[7] Excludes 1988 award payable from 1 April 1988.

Home Helps

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each local authority in the United Kingdom the number of home helps employed on a per capita basis, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Newton: The full information requested for each local authority is not readily available and could be supplied only at disproportionate cost. The table gives the information requested for the provision of home helps per capita (expressed per thousand population, all ages) for England only.

Information collected centrally on home helps employed by social services departments for each local authority in England is published on an annual basis in "Staff of Local Authority Social Services Departments" (S/F 1). Mid-year population estimates for shire counties, metropolitan districts and London boroughs are given in the annual OPCS vital statistics publications (Series VS). Copies are available in the Library.

Information for the rest of the United Kingdom is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and Northern Ireland.

TRANSPORT

Ferry Services (Fares)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest information about trends in fare levels for ferry services.

Mr. David Mitchell: Fares on ferry services are a matter for the companies involved. The Department of Transport has no responsibility for records of ferry fare level trends.

Rail Services (Report)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the level of provision of rail services, in the light of the National Economic Research Associates' report on rail services, commissioned by the National Union of Railwaymen, a copy of which has been forwarded to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Government policy towards the level of provision of rail services was set out in the Government observations on the Transport Select Committee's report on the financing of rail services (HC 420, annex C). I shall shortly be discussing the National Economic Research Associates' report with the National Union of Railwaymen in the context of this policy.

Heathrow (Charges)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department has given written evidence to the inquiry by the Civil Aviation Authority into the charges imposed by Heathrow Airport plc for freight movements between Heathrow and non-BAA airports: and when he expects the CAA to reach a decision.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In accordance with section 42 of the Airports Act 1986, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave written advice to the CAA in October 1987 relating to the charging practices of the other countries involved in the dispute. The CAA expects to complete its investigation and issue a decision by late summer.

National Bus Company

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the progress of the privatisation of the National Bus Company.

Mr. David Mitchell: The privatisation of the National Bus Company's bus operations was completed on 22 April when London Country (North East) was sold. These sales, over half of which were management or employee buy-outs, were completed almost nine months before the statutory deadline, which is a tribute to the board of NBC and a clear indication of the industry's appreciation of the opportunities afforded by deregulation.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport where the train diversions hitherto using the Settle to Carlisle railway will be accommodated on the British Rail network if a decision is made to close the Settle-Carlisle route.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is a management matter for British Rail. Its proposals for diversionary routes are set out in the board's financial case for the closure of this line, a copy of which was deposited in the Library of the House.

Commercial Vehicles (Weight)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a table showing the registrations of commercial road vehicles in each category of gross weight for the past 10 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The available information is as follows:

Severn Bridge

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the nature of the work still to be done on the Severn bridge;

(2) what work is currently under way on the Severn bridge;

(3) what items of repair and renovation have been completed on the Severn bridge;

(4) what is the estimated completion date for the current renovation and maintenance work on the Severn bridge;

(5) what is the estimated final cost of repair work on the Severn bridge;

(6) what is the up-to-date cost of the renovation and maintenance work on the Severn bridge.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The first two contracts for the provision of improved access and for strengthening the Aust viaduct were completed in 1986. Work currently under way includes the strengthening of the deck steelwork, installation of new hangers and the fitting of new columns inside the towers of the Severn bridge. Extension of towers and replacement of cable stays on the Wye bridge are also in hand, together with work to protect three river piers against possible shipping collision. A contract for resurfacing the crossing will start next year.

The programme of strengthening and resurfacing is due to be completed by the end of 1990 at an estimated cost of £56 million. Expenditure on the strengthening programme to the end of 31 March 1988 was approximately £15·5 million.

THE ARTS

Items in Lieu of Tax

Mr. Aspinwall: To ask the Minister for the Arts if there have been any items accepted in lieu of tax or allocated since he last made an announcement on the subject to the House.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 12 May 1988, c. 218-19]: I regret that the answer that I provided contained errors regarding the figures of the "special price" of £868,444 and the amount of £230,000 paid to the owner of the portrait of Captain William Wade by Thomas Gainsborough. The correct figures are £855,000 and £216,566 respectively. The amount of £216,556 was raised jointly by the Bath city council (from its Franklin Mint Fund), the National Art Collections Fund and the National Heritage Memorial Fund.

SCOTLAND

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the percentage of sawlogs which the Forestry Commission estimates will fail the M75 grading from plantations spaced at 1, 1·5, 2, 2·5, and 3m, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: M75 grading refers to a classification used to describe strength of sawn wood. The percentage and total yield per hectare of sawn wood falling below M75 grading vary with age, species, thinning and pruning treatment, as well as, in certain instances, the original spacing of the plantation. No estimate is available of the effect of spacing on all species. Where, however, there is evidence that significant reductions in the yield of higher grades may result from wider spacing, this is taken into account in current silvicultural practice.

Mr. Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy regarding future tree planting undertaken by the Forestry Commission in Scotland, with particular regard to the area of bare land to be annually afforested, the percentage of broadleaved trees to be used and the rate of return to be expected from such afforestation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission will continue to have a programme of new planting in Scotland of between 4,000 and 5,000 hectares a year. It is the commission's policy to incorporate at least 5 per cent. broadleaves in its planting schemes wherever it is practical to do so. New planting by the commission in Scotland between 1987 and 1990 is expected to earn 2·5 per cent. It would be 2·8 per cent. if there were no provision for the planting of broadleaves.

Area Health Boards

Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what proportion of the increase in expenditure which will be incurred by each area health board in Scotland as a result of the recent increase in pay for medical and nursing staff will be met by his Department;

(2) what additional payments will be made in cash terms to each area health board in Scotland to meet the costs incurred as a result of the recent pay awards to medical, nursing and other staff;

(3) what is the percentage increase in expenditure in each of the area health boards in Scotland as a result of the recent pay award to medical and nursing staff.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The sum of £92 million is being made available in Scotland to finance the full additional costs of the review body pay recommendations. Health boards will be informed of their additional allocations shortly.

Police Manpower

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to increase police manpower in Scotland; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to a similar question from the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 8 March, at column 145.

Detoxification Centre, Glasgow

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to set up a detoxification centre in Glasgow; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The provision of designated places is a matter for voluntary organisations, which may be eligible for grant under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968, or local authorities. I have not received any proposals for a designated place in Glasgow.

Prescription Pads

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has as to the numbers of doctors' prescription pads which are lost or stolen annually; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: During the last year some 214 prescription pads or parts of pads were reported as lost or stolen. This figure includes cases where the theft of a pad was incidental to another crime. Health boards normally circulate information about missing pads to chemists to prevent fraudulent use of prescriptions.

Stolen Prescriptions

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he has as to the numbers of stolen prescriptions which were processed by chemists in each of the last three years.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Where a chemist is presented with a prescription which he suspects is being used fraudulently, he would not process it but would alert the police. It is not possible to say how many fraudulent prescriptions are not detected at this stage and are inadvertently dispensed.

National House Condition Survey

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian, 29 October 1987, Official Report, c. 431, he has yet concluded his consideration of the proposal that there should be a comprehensive national house condition survey in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: I have, as yet, nothing further to add to the answers that I gave to the hon. Member on 2 November 1987, at column 431, and to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) on 8 March 1988, at column 85.

Housing Association Tenants

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has made any arrangements to enable the Scottish Special Housing Association tenants who wish to do so to transfer their homes to registered housing associations without losing their status as secure tenants before the implementation of part 2 of the Housing (Scotland) Bill.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Special Housing Association already operates a general policy of enabling its tenants to have access to a wide choice of arrangements in relation to the ownership and management of their homes. Where SSHA tenants wish the ownership of their houses to be transferred to a registered housing association, the unprecedentedly high level of capital allocation that we have made available to the Housing Corporation in Scotland for the current financial year will facilitate the acquisition of the houses by associations, although detailed decisions about the content of their programmes are a matter for the corporation.

Glasgow (Housing)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his policy on each of the conclusions of the Grieve report following the inquiry into housing in Glasgow.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government's response to the Grieve report was sent to the City of Glasgow district council on 29 February. A copy of that document has been placed in the Library.

Council House Sales

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it his policy to compensate any local housing authority which may be obliged to sell a house to a tenant for less than the outstanding debt on that property as a result of recently announced changes in the cost floor mechanism.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans to introduce any special arrangements. The housing support grant system takes account of authorities' aggregate outstanding debt position and the loan charges which fall to their housing revenue account. Authorities incurring deficits in terms of the housing support grant calculations already receive subsidy equivalent to these deficits.

Poor Quality Housing

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will undertake a study of the effect of poor quality housing on families with young children.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: My right hon. and learned Friend has no plans at present to undertake a study of this kind. It is the responsibility of district and islands councils to assess the housing needs of their areas.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he now expects to announce the full implementation in Scotland of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: As indicated to the hon. Member in my reply of 10 December 1987, the rate of implementation of further provisions in the Act must be dependent on the availability of resources. We have made progress earlier this year with the commencement of section 13 on persons leaving special education. I have no plans for commencing further provisions at present, but I shall keep the matter under careful review.

New Towns

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has yet given any consideration to the terms of the review of new towns promised by his predecessor in 1984.

Mr. Rifkind: The Government statement in November 1984 envisaged a review of the future of the Scottish new towns in 1989. To ensure that the Government's proposals are informed by the fullest possible consultation, I consider it necessary now to embark on the review, which I hope to conclude in the spring of 1989.

Formal consultation letters will be sent to the development corporations towards the end of May, inviting their comments on the four main areas to be covered by the review. These are:

(a) the criteria for determining when a new town development corporation may be judged substantially to have completed its task;

(b) the forward programme for wind-up, including the possibility of setting target dates;

(c) the transfer at wind-up of residual new town housing, industrial and community assets;

(d) the arrangements for employees of the development corporations.

The 1984 statement set down "trigger" populations for each of the five new towns, the attainment of which would set in motion the wind-up process. The statement promised a review in 1989 of these "triggers" and of progress towards them. However, it will be appropriate also to consider whether population — which can fluctuate for reasons unconnected with the physical, economic or social development of a town — remains a valid criterion. The review will examine alternative criteria for determining when to begin wind-up. It remains our intention that no development corporation will be wound up before 1 April 1990.

The White Paper "Housing: the Government's Proposals for Scotland" (Cm. 242) published in November 1987 made clear the Government's view that it would no longer be appropriate for the entire housing stock of a development corporation to transfer automatically on wind-up to the district council. The review will examine various options for dealing with rented housing still in the corporation's hands at wind-up, including possible roles for the district council.

As regards industrial and commercial property, the intention has been that these assets should on wind-up transfer to the Scottish Development Agency. However, the review will explore alternatives, including ways of transferring these assets into the private sector. Arrangements for the future management of community related assets such as open space and recreational facilities will also be developed.

In the course of the review the Department will consult the development corporations, local authorities and other interested bodies. A fundamental principle of the review will be to seek solutions that will maintain the vigorous success of the new towns in attracting and generating employment and in providing a very high quality of environment in which to live and work.

Much of the new towns' success has been due to the inventiveness and professionalism of development corporation staff. The Government will ensure during the review that staff are kept properly informed of developments.

Mental Health Patients

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many mental health patients in Scotland lost their entitlement to vote in the last general election as a result of their residence in a hospital.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 12 May 1988]: This information is not available. The answer I gave on 16 November 1987 to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Provan (Mr. Wray), at column 257, set out the facilities available to patients in mental hospitals at the last general election.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Derry Film and Video Collective Co. Ltd.

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to how the allocation from the European social fund to Derry Film and Video Collective Co. Ltd. was spent.

Mr. Viggers: The Department of Economic Development has no information as to how the allocation was spent because the company has not yet submitted a detailed claim for payment.

Under-fives

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the current population of four-year-olds in the (a) South Eastern education and library board, (b) North Eastern education and library board, (c) Belfast education and library board, (d) Southern education and library board and (e) Western education and library board;

(2) what proportion of four-year-olds in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland attend (a) nursery education provision, (b) primary school and (c) pre-school playgroup provision;

(3) what is the current population of three-year-olds in the (a) South Eastern education and library board, (b) North Eastern education and library board, (c) Belfast education and library board, (d) Southern education and library board and (e) Western education and library board;

(4) what proportion of three-year-olds in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland attend (a) nursery education provision, (b) primary school and (c) pre-school playgroup provision;

(5) what proportion of three-year-olds in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland are within families (a) with single parents, (b) with unemployed parents and (c) in receipt of income support and family credit;

(6) what proportion of four-year-olds in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland are within families (a) with single parents, (b) with unemployed parents and (c) in receipt of income support and family credit;

(7) what proportion of the population in each of the education and library boards in Northern Ireland is under five years old.

Dr. Mawhinney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to questions by the hon. Member for Antrim, North (Rev. Ian Paisley) on 24 March 1988, at column 226. Other information is not available in the form requested.

Electricity Industry

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met the chairman of the Northern Ireland Electricity Service; and if the subject of privatisation of the electricity supply industry was discussed.

Mr. Viggers: My right hon. Friend last met the chairman on 21 December 1986; I have met him on a number of occasions since, most recently on 22 December 1987. Privatisation has not been discussed, for the reasons given in my reply to the hon. Member on 16 March 1988, at column 619.

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a White Paper on privatisation of the electricity supply industry in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Viggers: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to him on 16 March 1988, at column 619.

EMPLOYMENT

Radiation

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals the Government are considering to reduce the annual radiation dose to workers; when a decision is expected to be announced; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: As announced on 18 November 1987, the Health and Safety Commission has set up a working group on ionising radiations. As part of its remit the working group is considering the whole question of radiation control measures in the light of guidance given by the National Radiological Protection Board. The working group hopes to be able to advise the commission on this matter later this year. I am content to await any subsequent recommendations.

Meanwhile, Health and Safety Executive inspectors are paying particular attention to the requirement in the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 that doses should be kept as low as reasonably practicable and not merely below the dose limits.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to restrict (a) nuclear contractors or (b) workers travelling between and working at different reactors, so as to restrict the exposure to radiation of workers employed by nuclear contractors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Ionising Radiations Regulations 1985 require all employers to ensure that, amongst other matters, doses of ionising radiations received by employees are kept as low as reasonably practicable and in any case below the relevant statutory limits. We do not believe there is any need to restrict nuclear contractors or workers travelling between sites any more stringently than other workers exposed to ionising radiations.

Flammable Gases and Liquids

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if the Health and Safety Commission has yet considered the proposals by the advisory committee on dangerous substances for future controls over flammable gases and liquids; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Having received the advice of its advisory committee on dangerous substances, the Health and Safety Commission has decided to drop its proposed regulations on flammable gases and liquids in favour of an alternative approach, based on a series of practical initiatives aimed at specific hazards or risks. Emphasis will now be placed on updating or extending standards and guidance in close co-operation with industry on a number of issues, chiefly the keeping and use of liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) in residential premises, controls for flammable liquids and the construction and operation of petrol filling stations. It is also intended to propose adjustments to the Gas Safety (Installation and Use) Regulations 1984, so that they cover all installations where LPG is supplied through fixed pipes.

The advisory committee noted that the Health and Safety Commission had already taken steps to meet concerns about standards of gas installation with two initiatives. The commission has published an approved code of practice, which comes into operation in August, concerning standards of training in safe gas installation. In consultation with the Council of the Confederation for the Registration of Gas Installers, it is developing proposals for an independent, broadly based representative body to promote safe gas installation. Mandatory registration of gas installers with such a body is among the proposals currently being considered.

London Docklands

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his answer of 9 May, he will break down the figures provided of the unemployed in the docklands area so as to show how many in each category are within the urban development area of London docklands.

Mr. Lee: The following information is in the Library. The table shows the number of male and female unemployed claimants, by age, in the local authority wards which most closely correspond to the urban development area of London docklands.

Restart Programme

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether a restart interview includes a question on previous employment.

Mr. Lee: The aim of a restart interview is to provide people with information and advice that will help them into work. In most circumstances the interview will involve some discussion about a client's previous employment.

Small Businesses

Dame Peggy Fenner: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what records are kept showing the percentage of success in cases brought to county courts under the small claims procedure by small businesses;

(2) what are the implications of the rate of success achieved in cases brought to county courts by small businesses under the small claims procedure for his Department's advice to enterprise agencies on the merits of embarking on such a course.

Mr. Cope: The judicial statistics maintained by the Lord Chancellor's Department do not break down information on small claims at county courts by type of plaintiff. Local enterprise agencies are autonomous private sector-led organisations and it would be inappropriate for his Department to give advice to them on the merits of pursuing small claims in county courts.

Penlee Quarry, Newlyn

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretry of State for Employment whether prosecutions are to be undertaken against the owners of Penlee quarry, Newlyn, Penzance, following the accident on 28 January, 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: No. The circumstances as identified by the investigation gave no grounds for the institution of prosecution proceedings against the owners.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits were made during the five years prior to 1987 by a mines and quarries inspector to Penlee quarry, Newlyn; what changes were required; how many were carried out; how many improvement or prohibition notices were issued; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There were 11 visits made to Penlee quarry in the five years prior to 1987. There were no prohibition or improvement notices issued. There were 25 recommendations made by mines and quarries inspectors during this period and these were acted upon by management.

Hantergantick Quarry, St. Bernard

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many visits were made by mines and quarries inspectors to Hantergantick quarry, St. Bernard, in the five years prior to August 1987; how many prohibition or improvement notices were issued; how many changes were recommended and acted upon; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: There were four visits made to Hantergantick quarry during this period. No prohibition or improvement notices were issued. There were eight recommendations by Her Majesty's mines and quarries inspectors and these were acted upon by the management.

Mines and Quarries Inspectorate

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the purpose of the recent meeting between the Director-General of the Health and Safety Executive and the Chief Inspector of Mines and Quarries; if the chief inspector was invited to make increased use of powers under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act; whether any action is to be taken against the chief inspector in the light of the prosecution record of the Mines and Quarries Inspectorate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The purpose of the meeting between the Health and Safety Executive and Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Mines and Quarries was to discuss the accident record in recent years in quarries and the means to its improvement. As part of this wide-ranging discussion Her Majesty's chief inspector was invited to make the fullest use of his powers under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974. In addition, the means by which co-operation by all parts of the industry to reduce the accident levels were explored, including the encouragement of greater efforts through communication, guidance and training. The executive indicated its intention to meet at regular intervals over the next two years to review progress.

Scotch Derrick Cranes

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied that under the Quarries (General) Regulations 1958, competent persons are required to detect the difference between steel and cast iron components used in Scotch derrick cranes, in view of guidance note PM43 issued in May 1984 by the Health and Safety Executive; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The competent person carrying out a thorough examination of a Scotch derrick is expected either to identify any critical parts made of cast iron or to advise the owner that the material of such parts should be established.

Confectionery Firms

Mr. Robert Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people are employed in the confectionery sector in the York travel-to-work area.

Mr. Lee: This information cannot be given without indirectly disclosing information relating to individual firms which was collected in confidence.

Minimum Wages

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many companies were prosecuted for paying below the wages council minimum in 1987; and how many were found to be paying below the minimum.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Of the eight employers prosecuted in 1987, four were for paying workers less than the wages council minimum; 4,443 establishments were found to have underpaid one or more workers.

Disposable Income

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the aggregate disposable income in 1979, 1981, 1983, 1985 and 1986, showing the median, lowest and highest deciles, and the lower and upper quartiles, for the following household types: (a) one adult retired, mainly dependent on state pensions, (b) one man and one woman retired, mainly dependent on state pensions, (c) one man, one woman and one child (d) one man, one woman and two children and (e) one man, one woman and three children, adjusting the figures for 1979 and 1981, as provided for 1983 in the Official Report, 22 July 1987, columns 211-212, so as to achieve a consistent basis.

Mr. Lee: It is not possible to produce estimates from the family expenditure survey for 1979 and 1981 on the same basis as those provided for 1983, in the Official Report of 22 July 1987. Figures for 1983, 1985 and 1986 are shown in the table.

[1] Household disposable income is defined as gross weekly cash income (plus imputed income from owner occupancy of housing) less statutory deductions and payments of income tax and national insurance contributions. Cash income includes wages and salaries, income from self employment, investment income, pensions and annuities, and social security benefits but does not include non-cash benefits such as housing benefit.

ENERGY

Electricity Supplies

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, pursuant to his Answer of 9 May, Official Report, columns 3-4, if he will specify to whom he was referring when he stated that there are many people in the electricity supply industry whose knowledge of transmission is as extensive as Lord Marshall's but who do not share his views on the future structure and ownership of the national grid.

Mr. Parkinson: There is widespread support for the Government's proposals in the electricity supply industry, but it would be invidious and inappropriate to single out individuals.

British Gas Shareholders

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy, how many shareholders there are in British Gas (a) who have paid the final instalment and (b) who have not paid the final instalment.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Over 99 per cent. of the nearly 3 million payments required in the British Gas third instalment had been processed by the close of business on Wednesday 11 May. Work is in hand to resolve the remaining cases, which number fewer than 30,000.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pigmeat

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what were the amounts of money levied on pigmeat producers by the Meat and Livestock Commission through the general expenses levy and the species promotion levy during 1987-88; how much was spent on pigmeat promotion during the same year; and if he will provide forecasts for the above for the current financial year and 1989-90 and 1990-91 respectively.

Mr. Donald Thompson: This is a matter for the Meat and Livestock Commission itself. The information it has given me is in the table.

[3] This sum comprises (or will comprise) income plus available reserves in pork and bacon promotion fund brought forward (underspent in previous years).

[4] Amounts of levy have not been determined: the Commission's plan depends on recommendations from the Pork and Bacon Promotion Council.

EC Free Food

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he expects there to be any European Community free food distribution in Warrington in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cambridgeshire, North-East (Mr. Moss) on 21 April. Although no organisations based in Warrington have been designated to operate the EC free food scheme this year, some designated organisations have said that they will operate widely across the country.

Milk

Mr. Butler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, pursuant to the answer of 4 May, Official Report, column 478, he will standardise the producer price per kilogramme of milk in 1987 in pounds sterling.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The information requested is set out in the table.

Producer Price[1] of Milk: 1987

[7] Provisional.

Salmon

Mr. Onslow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to receive the first report from the advisory committee on salmon stocks; and what matters he expects this to cover.

Mr. Gummer: I understand that the salmon advisory committee hopes to submit its first report, which will deal with the availability of information on the status of salmon stocks, later in the summer.

Nestlé

Mr. Henderson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if his Department has received any representations from Nestlé; and what response was given.

Mr. MacGregor: At his request, Mr. Maucher, chairman of Nestlé, met me on Monday 9 May 1988 to put points concerning Nestlé's bid for Rowntree plc, which I noted.

Farm Diversification

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what advice he has received from the European Commission of the percentage of expenditure on set-aside proposals which will be provided from Community funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 10 May 1988]: The Communiity financial contribution is to be in the form of reimbursement from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund of a proportion of the payment made to participating farmers. The relevant Community legislation sets the following rates of reimbursement:

50 per cent. for that portion of the payment which does not exceed 200 Ecu (£140) per hectare per annum;

25 per cent. for that portion of the payment which is between 200 Ecu and 400 Ecu (£140—£280) per hectare per annum;

15 per cent. for that portion of the payment which is between 400 and 600 (£280 — £400) per hectare per annum.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the future role of the producer organisations in the fishing industry.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Producer organisations will continue to form an integral part of the common organisation of the market. In particular they will continue to manage their membership to ensure that fishing is carried out along rational lines to maximise returns from the market and to ensure grading and labelling requirements are observed.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his practice on gathering information, consulting and announcing his decisions on total allowable catches and related matters to individual fishermen at the ports.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Decisions on total allowable catches are taken by the Council of Fisheries Ministers in the light of the latest scientific advice and other relevant factors. Consultation with the industry is a continual process throughout the fishing year; in particular MAFF fisheries scientists meet the main industry representatives in November of each year to discuss the latest scientific assessments on fish stocks of interest to the United Kingdom. The EC Commission's proposals on total allowable catches are circulated to the main industry organisations for comment and are subject to full parliamentary debate prior to final adoption.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what he hopes to achieve at the next EC Council of Ministers meeting with regard to the fishing industry in general, and the inshore fleets in particular.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: The agenda for the next EC Council of Fisheries Ministers has yet to be finally settled.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will take steps to make available to the public information about vessel landings and catches; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Information on vessel landings and catches is published on a regular basis through several channels:

(i) The annual "Sea Fisheries Statistics Table" is a publication of the Government statistical service (GSS) covering landings in the UK and is available through Her Majesty's Stationery Office. There have of late been delays in the production of this publication but more up-to-date figures are generally available on request from the Ministry's statistics unit. A similar publication relating to landings in Scotland is produced by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland.

(ii) Monthly figures on landings by species at the main ports in England and Wales are circulated widely to interested members of the industry. Again DAFS provide similar figures for landings in Scotland.

(iii) Press notices are issued from time to time by MAFF, DAFS and Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland giving summarised landings figures.

(iv) The UK monthly catch reports to the European Commission in Brussels covering catches of all quota stocks by UK-registered vessels are published in Fishing News.

(v) Following requests from certain producer organisations, the Ministry is now providing PO management with details of landings into England and Wales of particular stocks by individual vessels in membership of the PO. In accordance with the GSS code of practice on data confidentiality, the provision of such data to PO management is with full agreement of each of the vessel skippers or owners involved.

Fishermen (Lowestoft)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) when he next plans to meet Lowestoft inshore fishermen to discuss total allowable catches for 1988-89 and related matters;

(2) when he next plans to meet Lowestoft inshore fishermen to discuss total allowable catches and related matters for 1990 to 1992;

(3) when he next plans to meet Lowestoft inshore fishermen to discuss total allowable catches and related matters for the post-1992 period.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: I have no immediate plans to meet Lowestoft inshore fishermen. I am of course fully aware of their concerns and will continue to consult representative organisations as necessary as part of my Department's regular dialogue with the United Kingdom industry.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will outline his plans to ensure the short-term survival and the long-term prosperity of the inshore fleet at Lowestoft.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: I shall continue to pursue my policy of seeking to conserve fish stocks so that adequate supplies will be available for the future. The restrictive licensing scheme and the scheme of grants for vessel construction and modernisation ensure that the fleet is of a size appropriate to the available opportunities and that it is safe, modern and efficient.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he expects to be in a position to reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Waveney of 9 April about Lowestoft inshoremen.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: I shall reply shortly.

Cod

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to abandon the historic basis of total allowable catches for cod; and if he will introduce an allocation equal to boats of the same size regardless of port of registration.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: I have no plans to abandon the historic basis of total allowable catches for cod, which is an important part of the Community's conservation policy. Fisheries departments already manage cod quotas in the non-sector according to vessel length band and without regard to port of registration.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give a table showing the current year cod quotas and the recorded catches in the year in which historic catches are based for each of the following ports: Lowestoft, Bridlington, Scarborough, Grimsby, Filey, Great Yarmouth, Harwich, Southwold, Aldeburgh, Felixstowe and West Mersea.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Cod quotas are not calculated for individual ports, but landings at the ports listed over the reference period 1982-86 are as follows:

	Tonnes (landed weight)
Lowestoft	12,897
Bridlington	15,372
Scarborough and Filey	15,700
Grimsby	66,094
Great Yarmouth and Winterdon	211
Harwich, Walton and Clacton	667
Southwold	340
Alburgh	444
Felixstowe	844
West Mersea	193

For confidentiality purposes, landing figures are not made available for those small ports where three or fewer owners are based, and instead are amalgamated with neighbouring ports. Consequently, the figures for Scarborough, Filey, Great Yarmouth and Harwich and only readily available as shown in the table. Similarly, since 1985, the figures for West Mersea including landings at Tollesbury, Maldon and Bradwell.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps he takes to ensure that the cod quota allocated to (i) the port of Lowestoft and (ii) the port of Grimsby is (a) sufficient for their needs and (b) fair in relation to other English ports.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Fisheries Departments do not allocate quotas on an individual port basis.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on how the port of (a) Grimsby and (b) Lowestoft cod quota is decided, allocated and monitored; and what steps he has taken to ensure that it is a fair quota in relation to other ports.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Fisheries Departments do not allocate quotas on an individual port basis. However, sectoral quotas to producer organisations, some of whose economic area may include the ports of Grimsby and Lowestoft, are calculated in accordance with the methodology agreed with the industry as a whole.

Under the sectoral quota systems, it is for the producer organisations to monitor uptake of quota and to take whatever management action is necessary to keep within quota.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for allocating cod quotas in 1989 and subsequent years.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: The arrangements for allocating sectoral quotas are drawn up each year, usually in the autumn, in full consultation with the industry. A date has yet to be fixed in respect of the consultation exercise for 1989. The industry will also be consulted about non-sectoral quotas.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has for amending the current cod quota for Lowestoft before the autumn.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Quotas are not allocated to individual ports. North sea cod is managed either through sectoral quotas, allocated to producer organisations or directly by the fisheries Departments in respect of non-sectoral fishermen.

The quota available for Lowestoft depends, in the case of the sectoral quota allocated to the Yorkshire and Anglia Fish Producer Organisation, on the number of vessels in membership, their track records, the degree of over-fishing in 1987 and the decision of the producer organisation on the proportion of its quota to be allocated to Lowestoft. There is no non-sectoral allocation to Lowestoft.

The only possibilities whereby the cod allocation to Lowestoft could be increased would be either through a quota swap with another member state or an increase in the North sea cod total allowable catch (TAC). Neither is likely to happen before the autumn and any TAC increase would need to be based on scientific information.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to deal with the surplus to quota cod thrown overboard at sea; how much cod is killed in this way in a year in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Discards at sea arise both because of quota management measures and provisions concerned with technical conservation. It is not possible to quantify the level of cod discarded in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food why the allocation of North sea cod to the Yorkshire and Anglia Fish Producers Organisation was reduced from 9·4 per cent. of the United Kingdom total in 1985 to 6·8 per cent. of the United Kingdom total in the current year; and what are the parallel allocations to all other producer organisations in the same period.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Fluctuations in the level of sectoral quotas from year to year are due to a number of factors including changes in the vessels in membership of a producer organisation compared with previous years; changes in the vessels with incomplete track records compared with previous years and which therefore require "notional" allocations; the level of penalty for over-fishing; the level of compensation due to over-fishing by others; and, in 1988, the allowance which the industry, including YAFPO, agreed should be set aside for vessels of 10 m and under.

The methodology for calculating sectoral quotas is agreed each year in full consultation with the industry.

I am not able to list the allocations to all producer organisations because some of them wish their figures to be regarded as commercially confidential.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he plans to meet representatives from the Yorkshire and Anglia Fish Producers' Organisation to discuss the current quota year in relation to cod.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: I have no plans to do so at present.

Fishermen (Set-aside Scheme)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will introduce a set-aside scheme for inshore fishermen to pay them not to catch fish, similar to the proposed set-aside for farmers.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: No.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the part quotas play in conserving measures; and if he has plans to allow quota shares to expand steadily.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: Quotas and technical conservation measures taken together are vital elements of the common fisheries policy in ensuring conservation of fish stocks. Technical conservation measures are regularly reviewed in the light of the latest scientific advice: furthermore, a special EC Commission scientific working group is currently studying exploitation patterns in the North sea.

The United Kingdom has been in the forefront of efforts within the Community to ensure that quotas and technical conservation measures are properly enforced, leading to healthy and growing stocks of fish which in the long-term should be able to sustain higher yields, from which the United Kingdom fishing industry will benefit.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he had from, and what advice his Department gave to, the Yorkshire and Anglia Fish Producers Organisation over quota management for 1988 at Lowestoft; what representations he has had since the year began; and what action he now proposes to take.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: I have not received any representations from the Yorkshire and Anglia Fish Producers' Organisation specifically about quota management at Lowestoft, but I have received correspondence concerning sectoral quota allocations for the producer organisation as a whole. The producer organisation is responsible for the management of the sectoral quota at Lowestoft.

WALES

Bristol Channel

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many discharges or deposits into the Bristol channel from south Wales sources are currently authorised in respect of raw sewage, sewage sludge, industrial, nuclear or other wastes.

Mr. Grist: The public register held by the Welsh water authority contains details of all authorised discharges including those to the waters of the Bristol channel.

In respect of the dumping of sewage sludge, the Welsh water authority holds one annual licence for dumping off the south Wales coast.

A total of 28 authorisations have been granted for the indirect discharge into the Bristol channel of low-level radioactive waste of which one relates to a licensed nuclear site.

Pembrey salt marsh

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to announce his decision regarding the proposed development of Pembrey salt marsh; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend is considering information and views provided by Llanelli borough council, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, the Nature Conservancy Council and other interested people and organisations, following requests that he revoke a deemed planning permission for a road across Pembrey salt marsh. He will give his decision as quickly as possible.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Management Consultancies

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many of his Department's assisted management consultancies for companies were established by 1 May in each region.

Mr. Atkins: From the launch of the consultancy initiatives on 13 January, to 29 April, 2,094 projects have been passed to independent scheme contractors for the appointment of consultants, as follows:

	Number
North East	152
North West	327
Yorkshire and Humberside	233
West Midlands	249
East Midlands	154
South West	191
South East:
Cambridge area	89
Reading area	100
Reigate area	117
London area	315
Wales	60
Scotland	107

Departmental Advertising

Ms. Quin: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how much his Department spent on advertising in each year since 1979 and up to the latest date for which figures are available.

Mr. Butcher: Expenditure by the Department of Trade and Industry between 1979 and the end of March 1988 is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	0·25
1980-81	0·54
1981-82	0·83
1982-83	2·14
1983-84	1·39
1984-85	2·11
1985-86	1·22
1986-87	1·00
1987-88	[1]7·90

[1] (Estimated).

Telephone Exchange for the Deaf

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to assist the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, over and above sums guaranteed under the concerned technology scheme, with the funding needed to operate and develop the telephone exchange for the deaf on a long-term basis.

Mr. Butcher: My Department is contributing £70,000, over the two years starting 1 March 1988, towards the cost of the Royal National Institute for the Deaf's telephone exchange for the deaf. There are no plans at present to offer further funds.

Swiss Companies

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to the number of (a) successful and (b) contested bids by British companies for Swiss or Swiss-based companies in each of the last five years; and if he will publish the names of the companies concerned.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: United Kingdom companies are not required to register overseas acquisitions of companies. From press reports, however, my Department has identified the following cases of United Kingdom companies acquiring Swiss companies:

	Acquiring Company	Swiss Company acquired
1983	APV Holdings	Gelruder Ott AG
1984	Bowater	Roba AG
	Croda International	Kolmar Cosmetics
1985	None
1986	None

	Acquiring Company	Swiss Company acquired
1987	John Crowther	Wollimex AG
	Queen's Moat Houses	Hotel Admiral
1988	Blue Circle	Romag AG

There may well have been other acquisitions in addition to those listed. There is no available information on whether any of these acquisitions was contested or whether there were other bids which were contested and failed.

Single European Market

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give the sums paid for radio, newspaper and magazine advertising by Her Majesty's Government on the current campaign to increase United Kingdom awareness of the 1992 single European market.

Mr. Alan Clark: The estimated costs of, radio and newspaper advertising in support of the first stages of the single European market publicity campaign are about £56,000 and £620,000 respectively. No paid advertising in magazines is involved.

Asia and Africa

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the percentage annual change in the terms of trade between the United Kingdom and (a) low-income Asian countries and (b) low-income African countries for each year 1973 to 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark: I regret that the information is not available.

Companies (Share Registers)

Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many United Kingdom companies include in their articles of association a provision whereby the company board can refuse to register an entry in the share register.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [holding answer 13 May 1988]: This information is not available. It is for companies themselves to decide whether to adopt standard articles or alternatively to draw up their own. The standard articles are prescribed by regulation and for the majority of companies these are known as "Table A". Prior to 1981, table A included such a provision for private companies. The current table A does not. Whatever articles are adoped they can be examined by looking at the record of the individual company maintained by the Registrar of Companies, which is available for public inspection in Cardiff or London.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what sites have been disposed of by the British Steel Corporation in each of the last five years; what number of acres in each region have been disposed of (a) as a result of direction by a Government Minister and (b) without such a direction; and what proportion of such disposals went to (i) development corporations, (ii) BSC (Industry) Ltd., (iii) local enterprise agencies, (iv) local authorities, (v) other public bodies, or (vi) private bodies or companies.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The main sites sold by BSC over the last five years are as follows:

1983-84
611 acres, Shotton
Part of Normanby Park Works, Scunthorpe
110 acres, Dudley Works

1984-85
39·5 acres Butchersfield, Warrington
Bilston Works

1985-86
Stockholding Warehouse, Hounslow

1986-87
Monks Hall Works, Warrington

1987-88
378 acres, Normanby Park Works, Scunthorpe
London Works, Tipton
150 acres, Irlam
Mill Buildings and site (21 acres), Jarrow

No sites have been sold as a result of the direction by a Government Minister. It is not possible to identify the proportions of disposals to the various bodies mentioned because BSC does not record the purchasers in this specific manner. All disposals are made on the same basis of arm's length transactions at open market value.

Mr. Michael: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list those sites which are in the ownership of the British Steel Corporation but are (a) no longer in operational use or (b) projected to be surplus to operational requirements during the next five years; and if he will give an estimate of the acreage of such sites by region.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 29 April 1988]: Properties which are identified by the corporation as being surplus to operational requirements are offered for sale at open market value. BSC does not make projections of sites likely to become surplus to requirements: this is obviously dependent on operational and strategic decisions.

The sites at present on the market include:
775 acres agricultural land Twywell Estate Northants
Remaining Steelworks buildings, Corby
36 acres industrial land, Holwell
19 acres industrial land, Kettering
Warehouse, Swinton
Two farms, near Llanwern
Quarry, Scunthorpe
23 acres industrial land, Rotherham
6·5 acres industrial land, Bassaleg

ENERGY

Energy Consumption

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what the ratio of gross domestic product to energy consumption had been in the United Kingdom for the period 1973 to 1988; and what are the projections for 1990, 1995 and the year 2000.

Mr. Parkinson: The information requested is published as the energy ratio in the Digest of United Kingdom Energy Statistics. The data for 1987 are currently in preparation. For the period 1973 to 1986 the published figures are as follows:

Tonnes of coal equivalent per £1,000 GDP[1]

	Tonnes
1973	1·9
1974	1·8
1975	1·8
1976	1·8
1977	1·8
1978	1·7
1979	1·7
1980	1·6
1981	1·6
1982	1·6
1983	1·5
1984	1·5
1985	1·5
1986	1·5

[1] Total inland consumption of primary energy (temperature corrected). GDP (average estimate) at 1980 factor cost.

My Department has not published projections of future energy consumption since 1982.

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the annual (i) petrol, (ii) diesel, (iii) gas and (iv) electrical consumption in million tonnes of coal equivalent for the transport sector for the period 1973 to 1988; and what are the projected consumption levels for the period 1989 to 2000.

Mr. Parkinson: Consumption of petrol and diesel in the transport sector for 1973 to 1987 was as follows:

Million tonnes coal equivalent

	1973	1974	1975	1976	1977	1978	1979	1980
Petrol	30·1	29·3	28·7	30·0	30·9	32·7	33·3	34·1
Diesel[1]	12·7	12·6	12·6	13·0	13·2	13·4	13·8	13·3

[1] Includes gas oil/diesel use by railways and road and water transport, but excludes aviation fuels and gas oil used in the agriculture sector.

	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Petrol	33·3	34·3	34·8	36·0	36·3	38·2	39·7
Diesel[1]	12·5	12·8	13·7	14·7	15·3	16·4	17·3

[1] Includes gas oil/diesel use by railways and road and water transport, but excludes aviation fuels and gas oil used in the agriculture sector.

Consumption of electricity and liquefied petroleum gas in transport was very small, approximately 0·4 million tonnes coal equivalent and less than 0·05 million tonnes coal equivalent respectively in each of the years shown.

Projections of future fuel consumption levels are subject to considerable uncertainty. My Department does not normally publish energy forecasts. However, it did make available some conditional projections, including ones for transport, for the years 1990 and 2000 as part of the proof of evidence to the Sizewell B public inquiry, ref. DEN/P/1.

Electrical Appliances (Labelling)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether any proposals for the energy labelling of electrical appliances have been considered by Her Majesty's Government since 1979; what decisions were taken on such proposals; and what is the current policy of Her Majesty's Government on this issue.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Erewash (Mr. Rost) on 29 February 1988, at column 480. Energy labelling is a voluntary matter for the discretion of manufacturers and retailers, but I welcome its adoption and my energy efficiency office is always ready to advise those seeking its introduction or extension.

International Energy Agencies

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what have been the Government's contributions to (i) Euratom, (ii) the Overseas Economic Co-operation and Development Nuclear Energy Agency, (iii) the International Energy Agency and (iv) the International Atomic Energy Agency, since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Details of the Government's subscriptions to the OECD Nuclear Energy Agency (NEA), to the International Energy Agency (IEA) and to the International Atomic Energy Authority (IAEA), since 1979 are as follows:

	NEA	IEA	IAEA
1979-80	122	280	1,557
1980-81	118	294	2,079
1981-82	136	313	2,639
1982-83	146	398	2,609
1983-84	198	407	2,814
1984-85	205	454	3,531
1985-86	216	453	3,797
1986-87	230	513	4,099
1987-88	270	524	[1]4,527

[1] Provisional.

Source: Appropriation Accounts.

The Government's contribution to Euratom is not separately identifiable as it forms part of the United Kingdom's general contribution to the European Communities budget.

Nuclear Technology

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list all Government approvals for the overseas transfer of nuclear technology, reprocessing and waste management (a) since the formation of British Nuclear Technology in June 1987 and (b) prior to June 1987; what assurances the Government have sought and obtained in each case that the information is only for use for peaceful purposes; whether there have been any refusals of permission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 27 October 1987, at column 217. Details of individual contracts are commercially confidential.

Offshore Installations (Standby Vessels)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what representations he has received from oil companies, the standby industry and others about amending the code of practice contained in the document assessment of the suitability of standby vessels attending offshore installations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Amendment of this guidance document is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Because of my Department's interest in the requirement for standby vessels for offshore installations, we have received some representations on this subject. Where appropriate these have been passed to the Department of Transport.

Pressurised Water Reactors

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how the capital construction costs for possible new pressurised water reactors at Hinkley C, Wylfa B and Sizewell C have been calculated; and what assumptions have been used.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Energy Prices

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give the latest costings in 1988 prices, in pence per kilowatt hour, for electricity produced by (a) coal and (b) nuclear power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The latest costings in pence per kilowatt hour of electricity from coal or nuclear power stations is a matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

INF Treaty

Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the implications for introduction of verification procedures in the United Kingdom of the United States Senate's decision to postpone its consideration of ratification of the intermediate nuclear forces treaty.

Mr. Mellor: None of the INF treaty's verification provisions, including on-site inspections on United Kingdom territory, will take effect until the treaty comes into force. That is dependent on the exchange of instruments of ratification by the US and the Soviet Union.

Nihat Kaymaz

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he is making to the Turkish Government in order to secure the release of Nihat Kaymaz.

Mrs. Chalker: We have drawn the Turkish Government's attention to the public concern in this country about this case.

Micro-organisms

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to press for an international ban on all military research leading to the testing or release of genetically engineered micro-organisms to the environment.

Mr. Mellor: The 1972 biological weapons convention prohibits the development or production of microbial, other biological agents and toxins, of types and in quantities that have no justification for prophylactic, protective or other peaceful purposes. The implications for this convention of various technological developments, including genetic engineering of micro-organisms, are considered regularly at review conferences. The next such conference will take place not later than 1991.

Non-oil Developing Countries

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing, as a total for all non-oil developing countries, and the 1974 to 1987 cumulative totals in constant 1987 pounds sterling of non-oil developing countries (a) current account deficits, (b) increases in official reserves, (c) non-debt creating flows to these countries, net, (d) net long-term capital from official sources and (e) borrowing from private markets.

Mrs. Chalker: Information is not available in the exact form requested. The following table, which has been obtained from International Monetary Fund sources, shows data for all non-oil developing countries on external financing flows between 1974 and 1987, measured in current dollars. Particular attention is drawn to the explantions in the footnotes to the table.

Note: Except where otherwise footnoted, estimates shown here are based on national balance of payments statistics, which are not always easily reconcilable with year-to-year changes in either debtor-or creditor-reported debt statistics, in part because the latter are affected by changes in valuation. The figures for earlier years are not as reliable as those from 1980; there may be breaks in individual series and in some cases, data may have been estimated.

[1] Equivalent to currrent account deficit less official transfers. For purposes of this table, official transfers are treated as external financing.

[2] Pertains primarily to export credit.

[3] Positioned here on the presumption that estimates reflect primarily unrecorded capital outflows.

[4] Comprises short-term borrowing by monetary authorities from other monetary authorities.

[5] Includes use of Fund credit under General Resources Account, Trust Fund, Structural Adjustment Facility and Enhanced Structural Adjustment Facility.

[6] Estimates of net disbursements by official creditors (other than monetary authorities) derived from debt statistics. Official net disbursements include the increase in official claims caused by the transfer of officially guaranteed claims to the guarantor agency in the creditor country, usually in the context of debt reschedulings.

[7] Residually calculated. Except for discrepancies in coverage, amounts shown reflect mainly net external borrowing from private creditors and short-term flows.

Kampuchea

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has any plans to pay an official visit to Kampuchea to view conditions in that country; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: No. We have no dealings with the regime of Phnom Penh.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Court Interpretation Services

55. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Attorney-General whether the Lord Chancellor has any plans to review the Welsh/English interpretation services of the courts in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Welsh/English interpretation services comprise simultaneous translation facilities at selected Crown courts and a panel of some 20 interpreters selected and trained under the supervision of a Welsh circuit judge. The system works well and requirements are kept under review.

Social Security Commissioner, Cardiff

59. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General (1) whether, in the light of the recent changes in the social security regime, he will review the case for a resident social security commissioner in Cardiff; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what recent representations he has received concerning the decision to close the office of the social security commissioner in Cardiff.

The Attorney-General: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Chancellor has received a number of representations from Members of Parliament, Peers and members of the public about the closure of the Cardiff office of the social security commissioners and is keeping the matter under review. He is, however, satisfied that neither the current case load nor the recent changes in legislation affecting social security are likely to require changes to the present arrangements for hearings in Cardiff of appeals to the commissioners.

Prosecution Policy (Insulting Behaviour)

60. Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Attorney-General what is the policy of the Crown Prosecution Service towards prosecuting in cases of alleged insulting behaviour.

The Attorney-General: When considering all cases, including allegations of insulting behaviour, the Crown Prosecution Service applies the principles set out in the code for Crown prosecutors. If the hon. Gentleman is concerned as to the application of these principles in a particular case I shall endeavour to assist him if he will write to me.

Legal Profession (Intake)

63. Mr. Anderson: To ask the Attorney-General what assessment he has made of the implications for his policy towards promoting a balanced social intake into the legal profession of the current level of grant support from local education authorities to postgraduate law students taking professional courses; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Promoting a balanced social intake into the legal profession primarily is a matter for the profession itself. The current level of grant support to postgraduate students is under discussion between the profession and the Department of Education and Science.

"Spycatcher"

64. Mr. Cryer: To ask the Attorney-General what administrative costs he estimates are likely to be incurred in 1988 in the suppression of the book "Spycatcher".

The Attorney-General: To seek to quantify costs of this nature would involve disproportionate expense. Future costs cannot usefully be estimated.

Irish Attorney-General

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Attorney-General what consultations he has had with the Attorney-General of the Irish Republic within the Anglo-Irish Intergovernmental Conference or otherwise; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: I have had consultations with the Attorney-General for the Republic of Ireland on four occasions since taking office.

We have discussed matters of concern to our respective responsibilities, and principally the basis upon which extradition from the Republic of Ireland to the United Kingdom of suspected offenders can be undertaken in the light of changes at first proposed and now effected in the Republic's legislation. These consultations have resulted in a clear mutual understanding of matters that respectively concern us, and we confidently hope that in all proper cases extradition will now take place, in conformity with the new Irish legislation.

PRIME MINISTER

Central London (Prime Minister's Visits)

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Prime Minister when she last informed the Members representing any of the central London constituencies of her intention to visit their constituency.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave him on 11 May 1988, at column 121.

Sewage and Waste Disposal

Mr. Speller: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to her answer of 12 May, if she will list all the Departments which have responsibility or which exercise powers, either individually or in co-operation with other Departments, in relation to the dumping of sewage and other wastes; and if she will specify in the case of each responsibility or power the Department or Departments which exercise it.

The Prime Minister: The dumping of sewage and other wastes at sea is controlled by licensing under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. The Departments responsible for operating the relevant provisions of the Act are the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland, the Welsh Office and the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland.

Control of the discharge of trade effluent from land to the sea is the responsibility of water authorities. The control of discharges of sewage including effluent from sewage treatment plants operated by water authorities are the responsibility of the Department of the Environment, which is also responsible, together with the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, for authorising the control of radioactive discharges to water. The Department of the Environment also has the responsibility for co-ordinating Government policy on the control of pollution generally, including the marine environment. In Scotland and Wales the Scottish Office and Welsh Office have similar responsibilities to the Department of the Environment in respect of environmental protection.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Mozambique

70. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if any additional measures are planned to assist the safe passage of British aid in Mozambique.

Mr. Chris Patten: I keep this matter under frequent review, with other aid donors and the Mozambique Government.

Kampuchea

71. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met a representative of the Phnom Penh Government to discuss the provisions of development assistance for Kampuchea.

Mr. Chris Patten: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor I have ever met a representative of the Heng Samrin regime.

Food (Radioactivity)

72. Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford of 14 March, Official Report, columns 426-7, if, in the light of recent statements made by the Danish Foreign Minister, he will review his answer on levels of radioactivity in EEC food aid consignments.

Mr. Chris Patten: The written reply to a Danish Member of Parliament made by Denmark's Foreign Minister on 8 April on radioactivity levels in EC food aid consignments is entirely consistent with the reply I gave to the hon. Lady on 14 March, as clarified by my subsequent letter of 29 March.

EC/ACP Council of Ministers

73. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government were represented at the EC/ACP Council of Ministers in Mauritius; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I represented Her Majesty's Government at the annual ACP/EC Council of Ministers meeting which this year was held in Mauritius on 10-11 May. The meeting reviewed the whole range of co-operation between the African, Caribbean and Pacific (ACP) states and the European Community within the framework of the Lomé convention. There was also an opportunity for informal discussions with ACP and EC colleagues on the prospects for the negotiations for a successor to the present Lomé convention, which will start in the autumn.

Official Aid

74. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of gross national product was provided as official development assistance in 1987; and if he will make a statement about Her Majesty's Government's policy on progress towards attaining the United Nations 0·7 per cent. of gross national product target in 1988-89.

Mr. Chris Patten: We do not yet have the figure for 1987.

As to the attainment of the 0·7 per cent. United Nations target, I can only say that, like previous Administrations, the Government are not able to set a date for achieving this. But, as the House will know, the aid programme is now growing in real terms and its quality is high.

Ethiopia

75. Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the current progress of aid to Ethiopia.

Mr. Chris Patten: We have committed over £45 million for famine relief in Ethiopia through bilateral and European Community channels since the beginning of 1987. Emergency aid operations in northern Ethiopia have been severely disrupted by the recent escalation of civil war and the Ethiopian Government's decision that expatriate relief workers should leave Eritrea and Tigré. In other parts of Ethiopia relief operations are proceeding reasonably satisfactorily, although the state of Sudanese refugees in western Ethiopia is a matter of grave concern.

In addition to emergency aid, we are providing technical co-operation, training and assistance with famine rehabilitation including a £1·2 million well rehabilitation project in Welo region.

Afghan Refugees

76. Dr. Twinn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has for providing further assistance to Afghan refugees.

Mr. Chris Patten: Following signature of the Geneva agreements last month, I have announced a doubling of our annual programme of support for Afghan refugees to £10 million in the current financial year. These funds will support the work of British voluntary agencies and multilateral organisations such as the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and the International Committee of the Red Cross. This assistance will be conditional on properly co-ordinated international arrangements for the resettlement of Afghan refugees being put in place.

South Africa

Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the extent to which and the ways in which the provisions of the Promotion of Orderly Internal Politics Bill now going through the South African Parliament would affect the funding of activities in South Africa through the British aid programme in respect of both bilateral and multilateral aid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: The full implications of the Bill are not yet clear, but we would deplore legislation which sought to restrict the flow of aid funds from abroad. We have already made our views clear to the South African Government both bilaterally and through representations made jointly with our European partners. We will go on doing all we can to ensure that aid for black South Africans continues.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Driving Licence Suspensions

77. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many driving licences were suspended for alcohol-related and for other offences in 1987.

Mr. John Patten: The information available relates to the number of disqualifications from driving by broad offence group, and is published in table 16 of Home Office statistical bulletin issue 36/87, "Offences Relating To Motor Vehicles, England and Wales 1986", copies of which are in the Library. In 1986, about 96,000 offences of driving, and so on, after consuming alcohol or taking drugs were so dealt with. There were about 162,000 disqualifications for all motoring offences, including disqualifications imposed under the "totting-up" rule. Figures for 1987 will be published later this year.

Glue Sniffing

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to change the powers of the police to deal with the problem of glue sniffing.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The police have adequate powers to deal with those found supplying intoxicating substances in contravention of the Intoxicating Substances (Supply) Act 1985. They have also been given guidance about the options open to them in dealing with glue sniffers in Home Office circular No. 30/84, a copy of which is in the library.

Litter

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been for offences involving the dropping of litter in the past year.

Mr. John Patten: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson) on 21 April, at column 966. Information for 1987 will be published in the autumn in "Criminal Statistics, Supplementary Tables Vol. 1".

Animals (Experiments)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to further limit experimentation on animals which is not directly necessary in the interest of human or animal health.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no plans to seek amendment of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, section 5(3) of which lays down the purposes for which the use of animals in experimental and other scientific procedures may be authorised.

Prisoners (Clothing)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many changes of clothes prisoners are allowed per week at each of the following prisons; Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Convicted male inmates at these establishments are provided with at least one complete change of shirt, socks and underwear each week with other clothing being changed as necessary. Inmates employed in locations such as the kitchen and officers' mess or on maintenance work have more frequent changes of clothes. Unconvicted men may arrange their own supply of clean clothing, but otherwise are provided with clean kit on the same basis as covicted inmates.

The female inmates at Holloway, whether convicted or unconvicted, wear their own clothing and do their own laundry. They are normally allowed to have three sets of clothes at any one time.

Prisoners (Baths)

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many baths, showers and lavatories there are for prisoners' use; and how many baths or showers prisoners are allowed per week at each of the following prisons; Birmingham, Leeds, Pentonville, Manchester, Wandsworth, Wormwood Scrubs and Holloway.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: All inmates have a bath or shower on reception and thereafter at least once a week. In addition, those participating in PE, located in hospital units or working in particular parties (kitchen, officers' mess, works department, and so on) will bathe or shower more often. At Holloway, there is normally no restriction on the frequency with which the inmates may bathe or shower.

The following table sets out the other information requested:

Establishment	Baths	Showers	WCs/urinals
Birmingham	39	71	320
Leeds	6	42	[1]175
Pentonville	7	69	312
Manchester	10	72	193
Wandsworth	14	65	[2]366
Wormwood Scrubs[3]	39	129	122
Holloway	37	19	508

[1] 12 additional WCs are being provided as part of a redevelopment project.
[2] Eight cells are being converted to integral sanitation.
[3] Excluding A wing, which is temporarily closed.

Independent Broadcasting Authority

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to reappoint the present chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority when his term of office comes to an end.

Mr. Renton: Lord Thomson has informed my right hon. Friend that he wishes to retire when his appointment as chairman of the IBA comes to an end at the end of this year. We hope to announce a successor in the autumn.

Marine Theft

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the latest available statistics on marine theft, particularly from pleasure craft.

Mr. John Patten: The information that is collected centrally does not enable thefts from boats to be distinguished from other thefts.

Temgesics

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to include Temgesics in a classification under the Misuse of Drugs Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no immediate plans to bring Temgesic within the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971, but we shall be keeping it under review in consultation with the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs.

Eviction

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the latest statistical information for (a) England and (b) Wales concerning (i) the number of prosecutions under the Protection from Eviction Act 1977 for harassment and unlawful eviction and (ii) the number of successful prosecutions.

Mr. John Patten: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, is given in the following table:

Defendants proceeded against for offences under the Protection from Eviction Act 1977
England and Wales 1986
Number of defendants

Section of the Act	Offence description	Area	Total proceeded against	Total found guilty
1(2)	Unlawful eviction	England	70	49
		Wales	10	5
1(3)	Unlawful harassment	England	26	10
		Wales	—	—

Racial Attacks

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on the number of personal attacks per year since 1979 defined as racially motivated, the number of related prosecutions and the number of resulting convictions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that the information is not available in the precise form requested, and that no relevant information is available prior to 1983. The available information is set out in the following table:

Number of "racial incidents"[1] reported to the Metropolitan police: number of racial incidents in which arrests were made; and number of racial incidents "cleared up"

	1983	1984	1985	1986	1987
Serious assaults	n/a	322	350	220	270
Minor assaults	n/a	189	243	282	397
All racial incidents[2]	1,276	1,515	1,945	1,733	2,179
Racial incidents in which arrests made[3]	n/a	197	286	217	279
Racial incidents "cleared up"[4]	n/a	n/a	n/a	n/a	672

[1] A "racial incident" is defined by the Metropolitan police as "any incident in which it appears to the reporting or investigating officer that the complaint involves an element of racial motivation, or any incident which includes an allegation of racial motivation made by any person".
[2] The figures given include the following types of incident; serious assaults; minor assaults; arson; criminal damage; leafletting; abusive etc. behaviour; and slogan writing.
[3] Figures are not available on the number of persons arrested.
[4] A "clear up" occurs when both the offender and victim are known to the police and appropriate action (including arrest, summons, caution or other measure) is taken.

I know that the Commissioner shares my concern about the continuing incidence of racially motivated attacks and harassment. Effective action to combat such attacks is part of the Commissioner's force goal for 1988 (as it has been since 1985). In pursuit of this a number of special initiatives have been or are being taken.

Force instructions have been issued which provide mandatory requirements in respect of recording, investigating and monitoring practices. Initiatives also include anti-racial harassment campaigns (published in five Asian languages) and promoting multi-agency initiatives such as, racial harassment panels, helplines, community seminars and crime prevention advice. A special squad has been established in Newham and Tower Hamlets collating, evaluating and disseminating intelligence about racial incidents with a view to identifying patterns and arresting offenders.

I welcome these initiatives, which I believe demonstrate the commitment of the Metropolitan police to tackling these shameful crimes.

Kerb Crawling

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide figures for 1985 to the most recent date for which information is available for (a) the number of arrests for kerb crawling under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 in the metropolitan area as recorded in Metropolitan police figures and (b) the number of prosecutions for kerb crawling under the Sexual Offences Act 1985 in the metropolitan area, as recorded in Metropolitan police figures.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, shows no prosecutions in 1985 and four in 1986 in the Metropolitan police district under section 1 of the Sexual Offences Act 1985. There is no power of arrest under the Act.

Passport Office (Staff)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secrtary of State for the Home Department if he will consider increasing the staff at the passport office in Glasgow.

Mr. Renton: Additional permanent and casual staff are being recruited to deal with the current high level of demand for passport services. There are now 124 staff in post as compared with 83 at the start of the year. The complement will be further increased progressively from October 1988 after the Glasgow office has been computerised and begins to handle postal applications from London.

Citizenship

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his reply of 9 May, Official Report, column 11, how many of the applications for registration, received after 31 December 1987, have been (a) accepted for consideration and (b) refused; and how many applicants (i) have been informed or (ii) have still to be informed.

Mr. Renton: I cannot add to the answer to which the hon. Gentleman refers.

Neighbourhood Watch Schemes

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what methods are used to monitor the effectiveness of neighbourhood watch schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Home Office both undertakes and commissions research in this area. Indicators used to monitor effectiveness include local crime figures which, in some police force areas can now be produced for individual neighbourhood watch scheme areas; surveys including questions on fear of crime; information on the level of local involvement, and assessments of the resource implications for the police.

Immigration (Detainees)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was (a) the total number detained and (b) the average occupancy in (i) Harmondsworth detention centre, (ii) the Harmondsworth annex, (iii) Queen's building, (iv) the Beehive, Gatwick, (v) Latchmere house and (vi) the MV Earl William for each month from April 1987 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 3 April 1988]: The available information is as follows:

(iii) The "Earl William" was used as a place of detention from 22 May to 16 October 1987.

(iv) The Queen's Building detention accommodation was closed for refurbishment on 19 January 1988.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Vandalism

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the cost of vandalism in schools (a) in England and (b) in Cheshire in the latest available year.

Mr. Dunn: The cost of vandalism in schools in English local education authorities was estimated in total to be between £25 million and £30 million in 1985-86. I understand that the maintenance cost falling on the Cheshire authority due to vandalism was £531,000 in 1987-88.

Education Reform

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) when the national curriculum will be introduced into secondary schools;

(2) when the first 14-year-old will be assessed.

Mrs. Rumbold: The implementation of the national curriculum depends on the passage of the Education Reform Bill now before Parliament and the making of subsequent statutory orders. However, my right hon. Friend is considering introducing attainment targets, programmes of study and related assessment arrangements for mathematics and science from September 1989 for pupils entering the third key stage of 12 to 14, with the first reports on results of assessments made publicly available for pupils starting the third key stage in 1990. On that basis the first reported assessment of 14-year-old pupils would be in summer 1993.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the syllabuses for the core and foundation subjects will be produced.

Mrs. Rumbold: The national curriculum will not prescribe syllabuses for core and other foundation subjects. As now, it will be for schools to choose their own syllabuses. However, my right hon. Friend expects to initiate the statutory consultations required by the Education Reform Bill, if passed, this autumn in respect of programmes of study for mathematics, science and, for primary pupils, English and technology, with a view to orders being made early in 1989.

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of the impact of assessment on independent schools.

Mrs. Rumbold: No such estimate has been made, since independent schools will not be required to adopt the national curriculum and its assessment arrangements.

Maintenance Awards

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost, for 1988-89, of discounting parents' rental payments, in respect of the family home, in the same manner as mortgage payments, in assessing parental income for the purpose of calculating student grant awards and parental contributions to student financial maintenance.

Mr. Jackson: This information is not available.

16 and 17-year-olds

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many pupils, and what percentage, remained in full-time education after 16 and 17 years of age in each local authority in 1978-79 and the latest date available and the total for England.

Mr. Dunn: The latest available data are as follows. Information for 1978-79 is not available.

Numbers and percentages of students aged 16 and 17 in education in each local education authority in England.

Academic year 1986-87

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had, and with whom, regarding the coversion of Haberdashers' Aske's school to a city technology college in Lewisham.

Mrs. Rumbold: I have met representatives of the Haberdashers' Company on two occasions to listen to their views on a range of educational topics. In the course of these discussions they touched on their interest in the city technology colleges programme. Since then my officials have given technical advice to representatives of the governing body of the Haberdashers' Aske's schools about the steps which would be necessary to establish a city technology college in the schools' premises.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science which local businesses have expressed an interest in the establishment of a city technology college in Lewisham.

Mrs. Rumbold: No local businesses have yet approached the Department about such a possibility.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the projected capital and revenue expenditure for the conversion of the Haberdashers' Aske's school in Lewisham to a city technology college; how much of this cost will be met by the Government; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: No proposal has yet been made to us by the prospective sponsors of a city technology college to be established in the premises of Haberdashers' Aske's school. The details of what such a proposal might cost are not therefore known.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on his policy regarding the conversion of already existing schools to city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: We shall give careful consideration to any proposal made to establish a city technology college which has support in industry and commerce and in the local community.

Under-fives

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has yet received a final report from Professor Margaret Clark on her evaluation of research into the education of under-fives.

Mr. Dunn: Yes. Professor Clark's report is, I understand, due to be published today and I shall arrange for copies to be placed in the Libraries of both Houses. It is an important report, with implications for a major sector of education and I hope it will command wide attention. The views expressed in it are of course solely those of Professor Clark. My Department will be sponsoring a seminar to discuss its findings and to promote their dissemination.

EMPLOYMENT

Age Discrimination

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many representations his Department has received from individuals who feel that they have been discriminated against on the basis of age when applying for jobs.

Mr. Lee: I regret that the information requested is not available.

Mines and Quarries Inspectorate

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing, for each year since 1979, for mines and quarries, the number of (a) deaths, (b) serious injuries, (c) improvement and prohibition notices issued and (d) prosecutions undertaken by the Mines and Quarries Inspectorate.

Mr. Nicholls [holding answer 13 May 1988]: The information requested is as follows:

Year	Number of accidents reported		Notices issued
	Fatal	Serious	Improvement	Prohibition	Prosecutions
1979	60	589	0	2	2
1980	63	588	2	4	3
1981	51	943	0	5	0
1982	57	988	1	5	1
1983	37	943	1	4	0
1984-85[1]	39	522	2	4	2
1985-86[2]	51	894	3	3	0
1986-87	32	1,173	2	8	1
1987-88[3]	23	931	5	30	0

Note: Accident figures include coal mines, licensed mines, mines other than coal and quarries.
[1] Includes a 15-month period for mines.
[2] Includes a 15-month period for quarries.
[3] Provisional.

Open Tech

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the principal achievements of the Open Tech project since its inception: what is the current operating status of the project, and if he will give the following details of the activities of Open Tech to date: (a) the total cost to the Government, (b) the total contribution by (i) employers, (ii) local authorities and (iii) other organisations towards the costs; and (c) the number of students and trainees enrolled per year broken down by region, employer, local authority, other organisation, employment status, gender whether disabled, racial origin, and subject studied.

Mr. Cope [pursuant to his reply, 12 January 1988, c. 219]: The report of the Tavistock Institute on the Open Tech programme has been placed in the Library.

THE ARTS

Arts Council

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts what the total grant from the Arts Council to the 12 English regional arts associations is for 1988-89; and what percentage increase this represents over 1987-88.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his reply, 12 April 1988, c. 57]: I regret that an error was made in the increase of 3 per cent. in the allocation of moneys from the Arts Council to individual RAAs. The percentage increase will be in the order of 4·7 per cent.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bovine Somatotropin

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what information he has as to how many calves have been born as a result of the use of bovine somatotropin; what controls he has over the future use of such animals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: No calves have been born as a result of the use of bovine somatotropin.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many representations, and from whom, he has received concerning the use of bovine somatotropin; and if he will publish them.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I have received a considerable number of letters from individuals and organisations representing consumers, producers and distributors. It would not be appropriate to publish such individual representations.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences for the use of bovine somatotropin in the United Kingdom have been issued by him.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Three ATCs have been issued to permit trials in a maximum of 1,130 cows. No product licences have been issued.

Apples

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the current tonnage of apples in intervention in the European Economic Community; and what were the comparable totals in each of the last three years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The latest provisional figure available from the European Commission for the amount of apples withdrawn from the market under the Community's intervention arrangements for the 1987-88 season so far is 536,167 tonnes. In each of the previous years, the totals were as follows:

	Tonnes
1984-85	660,902
1985-86	184,553
1986-87	354,089

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of apples destroyed in the most recent annual period for which figures are available for the European Economic Community as a whole; and what was the total cost of such destruction.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The total amount of apples withdrawn from the market under the Community's intervention arrangements in 1986-87, the most recent year for which complete figures are available, was 354,089 tonnes. Of this, 105,023 tonnes found no outlets and were assumed to be spoilt or wasted. The amount of compensation paid to growers in respect of the latter tonnage was 12·5 million ecu.

Bristol Channel

Mr. Speller: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is satisfied with the water quality in the Bristol channel, particularly as regards its effect upon fish stocks, swimming and beach pollution; if he has received any reports of injury or illness to fishermen as a result of water-borne pollution; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: Fish stocks in the Bristol channel show no adverse effects caused by the quality of water. This is unsurprising as disposals of waste licensed by the Ministry are carefully controlled to protect fish and to avoid any pollution of beaches. I understand that the Ministry has received no reports from the area of injury or illness to fishermen as a result of water-borne pollution.

Fishing Industry

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the future size of (a) the Lowestoft and (b) the English inshore fishing fleet; and if he will make a statement on the role of the Lowestoft fleet in the United Kingdom fishery.

Mr. Gummer [holding answer 12 May 1988]: The Government are concerned to encourage an efficient United Kingdom fishing fleet with a catching capacity which bears a reasonable relationship to the available fishing opportunities. Within that overall objective, it is essentially for market forces to determine the relative size of different sectors of the United Kingdom fleet.

NATIONAL FINANCE

London Allowance

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to the Exchequer of paying a London allowance to those lawyers, accountants and inspectors of taxes employed in, or seconded by, Government Departments over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The estimated cost to the Exchequer was £1·25 million in financial year 1987-88. Only inspectors of taxes received a London allowance as distinct from London weighting in 1986-87, at an estimated cost of £0·25 million. No London allowances were paid before April 1986.

These figures exclude the knock-on effects on ERNIC, pensions and superannuation.

Inner London Secretarial Allowance

Mr. Cran: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the cost to the Exchequer of paying the inner London secretarial allowance to those in receipt of such allowance over the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Brooke: The inner London secretarial allowance was introduced with effect from 1 April 1985. Its estimated cost to the Exchequer is as follows:

	Cost of inner London secretarial allowance £ million
1985-86	1·2
1986-87	2·1
1987-88	2·1

Excluding the knock-on effects on ERNIC, superannuation and pensions.

Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the amount of debt outstanding on the balance sheets of each of the companies privatised since 1979 and the amount of this debt repaid prior to privatisation; and if he will specify out of which departmental expenditure programme the money for repayment was drawn.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 13 May 1988]: I refer the hon. Member to the annual reports and accounts of the companies in question for details of their balance sheets, and—to the extent that departmental expenditure was involved—to the relevant departmental Votes.

Take-home Pay

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much, in real terms, he estimates take-home pay for (a) a single person, (b) a married man with no children and (c) a married man with two children to have increased for those on (i) half average earnings, (ii) three quarters average earnings, (iii) average earnings, (iv) one and a half times average earnings, and (v) twice average earnings, between 1978-79 and 1988-89; and what are the comparable figures between 1973-74 and 1978-79.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 11 May 1988]: The figures are in the table.

Percentage change in real take-home pay

Multiples of male average earnings	½	¾	1	1½	2
Single
1973-74 to 1978-79	−1·0	−2·2	−2·8	−3·6	−4·1

Note:
The taxpayer is assumed not to be contracted out of SERPS, and to claim no allowances or reliefs other than the basic personal allowance (and child tax allowance where appropriate).

NORTHERN IRELAND

Kincora Boys Home

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Brent, East of 28 March, Official Report, column 312, what information was available to his Department concerning investigations undertaken by the Sussex police relating to allegations of homosexuality, prior to Sir George Terry's appointment to investigate the events at Kincora boys home.

Mr. Tom King [holding answer 26 April 1988]: I am not aware of any such investigation.

ENVIRONMENT

Copehill Down (Training Village)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many representations he has received calling for a public inquiry into the proposed construction of a training village at Copehill Down in Wiltshire.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend received 13 representations, all of them before January 1987.

Garden Festival (Stoke-on-Trent)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will institute an appraisal of the benefits derived from the garden festival at Stoke-on-Trent.

Mr. Trippier: Consultants were commissioned in December 1987 to evaluate the national garden festivals at Liverpool, Stoke-on-Trent and Glasgow. The benefits derived from these events are one of the elements of the evaluation.

Urban Development Corporations

Mr. Leighton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the memoranda setting out the terms and conditions on which payments of grant-in-aid to urban development corporations are made.

Mr. Trippier: I am placing a copy of the current version of the memorandum in the Library.

City Grant

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many responses he received to his consultation paper on city grant; how many firms attended seminars organised by his Department to discuss the scheme; and what changes were made to the scheme prior to its inception on 2 May in the light of such discussions.

Mr. Trippier: A total of 119 written responses to the consultation document were received by 26 April. A short summary of these has been placed in the Library of the House.

Five seminars on city grant were attended by about 900 representatives from private sector firms and other organisations. The majority of respondents and those attending seminars welcomed the proposal to introduce city grant and most favoured the lower threshold of £200,000 project value.

City grant was introduced on 3 May for projects with an estimated value of £200,000 or more.

Waste Disposal

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce regulations requiring notification to all waste disposal authorities by importers of non-special waste of all such waste passing through their jurisdiction.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no plans at present to introduce controls on imports of non-special waste into the United Kingdom, but we are currently considering the extent to which such measures may become necessary or desirable.

Radiation

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to what extent the exposure to radiation dose limits for the public takes into account the greater exposure risks among younger age groups.

Mr. Moynihan: When radiation dose limits are applied to the public, account is taken of the potentially greater exposure that those in younger age groups receive because of size, diet and habits. The National Radiological Protection Board, an independent expert body, advises the Government on recommended radiation limits in this country.

Caithness and Sutherland (Peatlands)

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will reproduce in the Official Report the resolutions passed by the International Union for Conservation of Nature and Natural Resources at the Costa Rica conference on the subject of the peatlands of Caithness and Sutherland.

Mr. Moynihan: The text of the resolution adopted by the General Assembly of the International Union for Nature and Natural Resources in Costa Rica on the subject of the peatlands of Caithness and Sutherland is as follows:

17.62 International importance of Scottish Peatlands, United Kingdom

AWARE of the international importance of the peatlands of Caithness and Sutherland, and in particular the peatlands of the flow country of northern Scotland, as an important part of an area identified in the World Conservation Strategy as a priority biogeographic province for the establishment of protected areas;

AWARE that blanket bog is an extremely rare global habitat type, restricted to a few areas where cool oceanic conditions prevail;

AWARE that the blanket bogs of Caithness and Sutherland, Scotland, form the largest remaining example of this habitat type in the world;

INFORMED that "The Conservation and Development Programme for the United Kingdom; A Response to the World Conservation Strategy" states that the results of upland bird surveys show that "forestry operations should be planned with great care";

NOTING that peatland ecologies from nine countries at a conference of the International Mire Conservation Group (held in September 1986) expressed their dismay at the extent to which afforestation was found to be destroying this internationally important habitat, and viewed the speed of destruction with particular alarm;

NOTING the reports produced by the Nature Conservancy Council, the United Kingdom Government's own advisers on nature conservation, the Royal Society for the Protection of Birds, and the Scottish Wildlife Trust, documenting the loss of these blanket bogs to commercial forestry;

RECALLING the commitment of all Parties to the Ramsar Convention including the United Kingdom to promote wise use of wetlands and in particular wetlands of international importance;

AWARE of the United Kingdom Government's recent decision to protect a very substantial area of the Caithness and Sutherland peatlands, but at the same time to allow new afforestation of about 40,000 ha.

The General Assembly of IUCN, at its 17th Session in San Jose, Costa Rica, 1-10 February 1988:

1. Congratulates the Government of the United Kingdom on its recognition that much of Caithness and Sutherland is of national and international importance for conservation and that a very substantial area (amounting to approximately half of the presently unafforested area of peatlands in these counties) is to be safeguarded.

2. Calls on the Government of the United Kingdom to exercise extreme caution in the authorisation of any further planting proposals within the Caithness and Sutherland peatlands until it is clear where such plantings may take place without detriment to nature conservation.

3. Calls on the Government of the United Kingdom to ensure that the 40,000 ha of land that it is envisaged may be afforested falls outside important areas for nature conservation within the Caithness and Sutherland peatlands.

4. Calls on the Government of the United Kingdom to support, in areas not protected or afforested, farming practices that are compatible with conservation interests.

5. Calls on the Government of the United Kingdom to designate appropriate areas within the Caithness and Sutherland peatlands as a Ramsar site or sites and to consider nominating them for listing under the World Heritage Convention.

Landlords (Unlawful Behaviour)

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the local authorities in (a) England and (b) Wales which have a tenancy relations officer whose duty it is to investigate complaints of the unlawful behaviour of landlords which contravenes the Protection From Eviction Act 1977.

Mrs. Roe: The information is not available.

Ramsar Sites

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give the Ramsar sites listed in the United Kingdom, their area where known and date of listing; and if he will give the number and area of Ramsar sites which have been listed by other signatories to the Ramsar convention.

Mr. Moynihan: The sites in the United Kingdom, listed under the Ramsar convention are:

As at 19 April 1988, a total of 366 sites, covering some 29,703,635 hectares had been listed by the 47 other contracting parties to the convention.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff in his Department are working on the listing and designation of Ramsar sites and special protection areas as at 1 April; and what are the comparable figures for the years 1984 and 1986.

Mr. Moynihan: Lead responsibility for the consideration of proposals from the NCC for the classification of Ramsar sites and special protection areas in England and Wales rests with a branch of the Department's wildlife division. This branch currently comprises four staff, as compared with five in 1984 and 1986. In dealing with Ramsar and SPA proposals, they consult extensively with officials in this and other Departments and in accordance with the voluntary approach to which we are committed, with other relevant interests. They are engaged also on a wide range of other activities concerned with habitat conservation. Responsibility for classification of Ramsar sites and SPAs elsewhere in the United Kingdom rests with the Secretaries of State for Scotland and Northern Ireland as appropriate.

Genetically Engineered Micro-organisms

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider restricting approval of release of genetically engineered micro-organisms to products which have a clear benefit to human health or the environment.

Mr. Moynihan: Only a few proposals for planned release have been received so far. These have been on a small scale and have been aimed at gaining knowledge on several aspects of the new technology. Releases have only taken place after a full independent assessment of their safety to man and to the environment. The Government will review the position on restricting planned releases in the light of accumulated experience, and of the advice of the Royal Commission on environmental pollution, which is expected by early next year.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what methods are available for detecting and tracking genetically engineered micro-organisms which are produced without marker genes.

Mr. Moynihan: Genetically engineered micro-organisms can be detected and tracked in the environment by a variety of methods besides marker genes. Examples of other methods include gene probes, antibodies and enzyme abundance assays.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will consider prohibiting the environmental release of genetically engineered micro-organisms which are marked with antibiotic resistance factors.

Mr. Moynihan: Each proposal for the release of a genetically manipulated micro-organism is examined individually by appropriate expert advisory bodies. Any use of antibiotic resistance markers is one of the aspects which are specifically considered. Although the use of other types of markers is generally recommended, antibiotic resistance factors have been used, but only those which already occur in nature.

Caravan Sites Act

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment which London boroughs have (a) fulfilled the requirement of the Caravan Sites Act, (b) been granted a waiver from those requirements under his authority and (c) received his Department's grants in respect of each site; and which schemes are still being considered by him.

Mrs. Roe: The London borough councils have a duty under section 6 of the Caravan Sites Act to provide sites for gipsies residing in or resorting to their area. At 1 January 1988 the following London boroughs had provided sites for gipsies:

Barking and Dagenham
Bexley
Bromley
Croydon
Ealing
Enfield
Greenwich
Hammersmith and Fulham (jointly with Kensington and Chelsea)
Haringey
Harrow
Havering
Hillingdon
Hounslow
Kensington and Chelsea (jointly with Hammersmith and Fulham)
Kingston-upon-Thames

Lambeth
Lewisham
Merton
Newham
Redbridge
Richmond-upon-Thames
Southwark
Sutton
Tower Hamlets
Waltham Forest
Wandsworth

The Secretary of State has no powers to exempt authorities from their duty to provide sites. The power to do so originally contained in the Caravan Sites Act 1968 was repealed by the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980.

I will write to the hon. Member about Exchequer grant for gipsy site schemes.

Seismic Monitoring

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage area of the United Kingdom is subject to regular seismic monitoring; if the south-east of England is so covered; and what information he has from the European Economic Community about the comparable practice in France.

Mr. Trippier: The whole of the United Kingdom is subject to continuous seismic monitoring, but monitoring stations are unevenly distributed. The sizes of events that can be detected and the quality of data from which the locations of events can be calculated vary as a result of that uneveness. The monitoring capacity is least well developed in south-east England and Northern Ireland. No information has been obtained by the Secretary of State from the European Economic Community on current practices in France.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what requests he has had from the British Geological Survey to finance seismic monitoring programmes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: The BGS has requested contributions from my Department to the funding of its seismic monitoring programme several times in the last 10 years. As a result, a significant extension to the monitoring network was established in the midlands area and the current monitoring capacity has been maintained. My Department is currently discussing with BGS and other interests an improved network.

Earthquakes

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information his Department has on historical evidence of earthquakes in the south-east of England; and what information has been collected about geological structures in the area which are associated with earthquakes.

Mr. Trippier: My Department has access to scientific and technical publications which contain records of historical earthquakes and information on geological structures in south-east England. It also receives reports on current seismic events detected by monitoring equipment operated by the British Geological Survey. Whilst documents referring to earthquakes are fairly numerous and over a period of over 1,000 years it is likely that only the largest events were recorded before modern monitoring arrangements commenced, the amount of information on each event is limited. The relationship between individual seismic events and specific geological structures is poorly known and information on deep geological structures in the south-east is fairly limited.

Housing Co-operatives

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if housing association grant is payable to a housing co-operative in receipt of mortgage income tax relief under the mortgage income tax relief scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The arrangements under which housing association grant (HAG) can be used in conjunction with private finance to provide rented housing schemes are relatively new, and detailed rules are still being developed. If a registered fully mutual housing association eligible for mortgage tax relief were to put forward proposals also involving the use of HAG, we would consider them.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has offered guidelines to water authorities concerning the transfer of staff to the new National Rivers Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My noble Friend the Minister for Environment, Countryside and Water, has already issued guidelines to water authorities asking them to provide outline schemes of organisation for the separation of the functions that will pass to the National Rivers Authority into a separate NRA unit. Further guidance on staff transfer arrangements will be issued shortly.

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered the transfer of all the functions of the rivers division of the Yorkshire water authority to the proposed National Rivers Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The functions of the National Rivers Authority were set out in the policy statement which the Government published in December. These include the functions of land drainage, water resources, fisheries and recreation carried out by the rivers division of Yorkshire Water. In preparation for the NRA, water authorities are drawing up schemes of organisation in accordance with guidelines we have issued. We shall be considering these in the light of advice we receive from the NRA advisory committee.

Fly-tipping

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Woolwich (Mr. Cartwright) of 3 May, Official Report, column 390, when he expects to reach a decision, as part of the review of waste disposal legislation, on the possibility of making the registered owner of a vehicle used for fly-tipping liable to prosecution.

Mr. Moynihan: It will be necessary to consult a wide range of interested parties before coming to a decision on this issue. Consequently, it is not possible to give a firm date for a decision.

Rivers and Canals

Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has considered making the management of all British navigable rivers and canals responsible to one management body; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: We have no plans to create a national navigation authority.

National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what emoluments are to be paid to the chairman and committee members of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee.

Mr. Moynihan: As chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee, my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Crickhowell will receive an annual salary of £40,000. Final decisions about the pay of committee members must await their appointment.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the salary of the chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee.

Mr. Moynihan: As chairman of the National Rivers Authority advisory committee, my right hon. and noble Friend Lord Crickhowell will receive an annual salary of £40,000.

Water Meters

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether, before or after the privatisation of the water industry, he proposes that householders will be expected to meet the cost of installing water meters in their houses either (a) directly or (b) indirectly through increased water charges; and whether those households installing meters in advance of privatisation will be exempted from any further cost associated with compulsory water metering of households.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 13 May 1988]: Under paragraph 6 of schedule 1 to the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Act 1988 a water undertaker which requires domestic customers to be charged by measure must bear the cost of installing meters in existing properties. The water undertaker recovers its costs from the generality of its customers. That applies to water authorities and water companies alike, and is not affected by privatisation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Housing Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the additional costs of administration involved in the payment of the backdated housing benefit announced on 27 April, together with an estimate of the cost per individual case.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Livingston (Mr. Cook) on 6 May, at column 654.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing how many housing benefit claimants have lost and how many are better off in each district and islands area following recent changes in the system.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many Scottish Special Housing Association tenants are receiving less housing benefit than they received before the new housing benefit systems was introduced; and if he will break down the number of gainers and losers by district council wards.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that the information is not available.

Dispersed Alarm Systems

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has further considered the provision of dispersed alarm systems in the light of the Griffiths report; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris), and to the hon. Members for Caernarfon (Mr. Wrigley) and Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) on 8 March 1988, at column 171.

Genitourinary Medicine Clinics

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases were seen at genitourinary medicine clinics in the United Kingdom in each year from 1980 to the latest available year.

Mrs. Currie: The available information is given in the table. Figures are not available for those who receive private treatment. The figures are counts of conditions — an individual is recorded under each condition present and may be recorded more than once in the year for different courses of treatment. Figures for Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales are the responsibilities of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Northern Ireland and Wales.

New cases seen at NHS genitourinary medicine clinics in England

Year	Number
1980	458,979
1981	479,924
1982	517,668
1983	547,437
1984	569,928
1985	605,306
1986	647,359

QDSW (Funds)

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he has received on his decision not to fund the QDSW; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I have received no formal representations since my letter of 3 May to Professor Saul as chairman of the Council of Education and Training in Social Work.

Abortions

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will issue guidance to doctors performing abortions about the interpretation of the phrase "capable of being born alive", in the Infant Life Preservation Act of 1929;

(2) if he will issue guidance to doctors performing abortions about the difference in interpretation between the phrase "capable of being born alive", in the Infant Life Preservation Act 1929 and the word "viable" in the Abortion Act 1967.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. Interpretation of the statutes is a matter for the courts.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will issue guidance to doctors on the gestational limit beyond which it should be presumed that a child should be "capable of being born alive", under the terms of the Infant Life Preservation Act; and if he will make a statement outlining the specific medical evidence available to him in formulating this advice.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to do so. Whether or not any particular foetus is capable of being born alive is a matter for the clinical judgment of the doctor concerned taking into account all the circumstances of the particular case. The best advice available on this subject remains the "Report on Foetal Viability and Clinical Practice", prepared in 1985 by a working party of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists together with representations of other medical and midwifery professional bodies, and sent to all fellows and members of the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists in this country. Its recommendations were unanimously supported in November 1987 in a further report by the same professional bodies, together with the Clinical Genetics Society.

Agency Staff

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) whether he has any information concerning the total cost each year of agency personnel used in each regional health authority to fill vacant administrative posts; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what information he has concerning the cost to the National Health Service of using administrative and secretarial staff from agencies compared with the cost of fully employing such staff;

(3) if he will estimate the total annual additional cost to the National Health Service of using agency staff to fill vacant clerical, secretarial and administrative posts.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the information that is available for expenditure on agency staff employed on administrative, secretarial and clerical work in the National Health Service in England for the year 1986-87. Details of the individual administrative and clerical posts covered by agency staff are not available centrally.

1986-87 Expenditure on Non-National Health Service Agency, and So On)—Administrative and Clerical Staff

Region	Total Administrative and Clerical Staff £000s	Typing and Secretarial Staff £000s	Other Administrative and Clerical Staff £000s
Northern	96	68	28
Yorkshire	670	258	412
Trent	993	486	507
East Anglian	954	488	466
North West Thames	6,407	3,489	1,918
North East Thames	5,961	3,291	2,670
South East Thames	3,783	1,930	1,853
South West Thames	6,563	1,985	4,578
Wessex	1,089	623	466
Oxford	663	258	405
South Western	791	550	241
West Midlands	1,718	860	858
Mersey	143	80	63
North Western	384	216	168
London Postgraduate Teaching Hospitals	1,962	1,594	368
Family Practitioner Committees	240	137	103
England Total	31,418	16,313	15,105

All figures independently rounded to nearest £000.
The figures exclude expenditure by certain SHAs and other bodies providing central services to the NHS. Their annual accounts do not separately identify such expenditure but, given the level of their total expenditure, that on agency staff is not thought to be significant.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps his Department is encouraging district health authorities to take in order to reduce dependency upon agency arrangements.

Mr. Newton: It is a matter for authorities at local level to make day-to-day decisions on the deployment of staff. Agency staff are used to alleviate staffing problems for a number of reasons including cover during periods of leave and where special skills are required for short-term projects. In the nursing and midwifery grades, staff are now being offered more flexible work arrangements, more opportunities for part-time work and job sharing, and nurse banks are being established. The recommendations of the independent pay review body and the new grading structure are expected to assist recruitment and retention of nursing and midwifery staff, and thus reduce reliance on agency staff.

Within the medical and dental staff group I am aware of health authorities' concern about the cost of M and D staff engaged through commercial agencies and officials are currently considering this issue with representatives of NHS management.

Out-patients (Waiting Lists)

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he proposes to take in the light of the conclusions of the paper relating to out-patients waiting lists which appeared in the British Medical Journal of 30 April, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Newton: I have noted the conclusions of the paper drawn on the basis of a study at the Royal Northern hospital. The pay and conditions of secretarial and clerical staff are matters for negotiation in the Administrative and Clerical Staffs Whitley council. This council is currently discussing a revised pay and grading system with a view to helping health authorities to overcome problems of recruitment and retention of certain groups of staff in particular geographical areas. In addition, health authorities are encouraged to use local initiatives on employment conditions to make jobs more attractive.

Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions with local authority associations about the implementation of the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: We are embarked on a series of discussions with local authority associations about the progressive implementation of the Act, in order to identify the resources required to implement each section. These discussions are continuing.

Landlords (Payments)

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been paid to landlords under the Social Security (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1987 (S.I., 1987, No. 1968) over the latest period of 12 months for which figures are available; and if he has been monitoring the operation of the regulations.

Mr. Portillo: These regulations did not come into force until 11 April 1988. The provision of the regulations will be monitored and information on amounts paid direct to landlords will be collected, in due course, as part of the annual statistical inquiry.

The figures for direct payments to landlords under the Supplementary Benefit (Claims and Payments) Regulations 1981 (S.I., 1981, No. 1525) which were in force before 11 April were not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Hospices

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make additional resources available to district health authorities specifically for distribution to enable voluntary hospices to pay their nurses an increase equal to the pay award to National Health Service nurses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to her on 10 May, at column 140.

Social Fund

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many Department of Health and Social Security offices were unable to make any payments from the social fund on 11 April because they had not received the appropriate forms.

Mr. Portillo: Arrangements were made well in advance to supply all offices with the appropriate forms. I am not aware of any offices that were unable to make payments from the social fund because they had not received the appropriate forms.

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many social fund applications have been received since 1 April in each of his Department's social security offices serving the district of Edinburgh; and, of these applications, how many have been accepted and how many refused;

(2) what percentage of the monthly social fund quota was allocated in each of his Department's offices serving the district of Edinburgh from 1 April to 1 May.

Mr. Portillo: Edinburgh is served by five local offices, Edinburgh city, Edinburgh east, Edinburgh north, Edinburgh south and Edinburgh west. Arrangements for the publication of data on the social fund were announced in my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 6 May, at column 656.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the criteria for refusal of help from the social fund for (a) claimants, (b) newly arrived immigrants and (c) refugees to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Portillo: Guidance and directions for the award of social fund payments appear in the "Social Fund Manual", which was published in November 1987 A copy is in the Library.

Departmental Office (Southampton)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the cost of the refurbishment of the Department of Health and Social Security office in Southampton.

Mr. Portillo: The latest work to refurbish the public waiting area in the Department's local office in Southampton has cost £64,000. Most of the work has been completed, but carpets have not yet been laid.

Rate Arrears

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if there are any plans to enable local Department of Health and Social Security offices to deduct rate arrears from income support to pay local authorities.

Mr. Portillo: We have no such plans.

Low-income Families

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he received the low-income families tables derived from the family expenditure survey for 1985.

Mr. Portillo: Ministers received the full set of tables in March and the final pre-publication version with accompanying notes last week.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the findings of the Wright committee on biocides for the treatment of water and the prevention of Legionnaire's Disease.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that the committee's work is well advanced and we expect to receive its report later this year.

Computers

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has any plans to integrate its proposed computer network with either the police computer network, the Inland Revenue computer network or the VAT computer network.

Mr. Portillo: The Department is working with Her Majesty's Treasury, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, the Inland Revenue and the Home Office on the proposed Government data network. The network would share communication facilities. There are no plans to use the network to link the department's computers to those of other Departments.

Plutonium

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what investigations are currently under way or planned to evaluate the absorbed plutonium uptake into the teeth of children living near the Sellafield reprocessing plant.

Mrs. Currie: Following a recommendation in the report by the Independent Advisory Group*, established in 1983 to investigate the possible increased incidence of cancer in west Cumbria, the Department has agreed to fund a study into the levels of bone-seeking radionuclides such as plutonium in the teeth of young people. The study will involve the collection, from all parts of the United Kingdom, including west Cumbria, of shed deciduous (milk) teeth, and permanent teeth extracted in the course of normal dental practice. This work is being undertaken jointly by the Harwell laboratory and the physics department of the University of Bristol.

*"Investigation of the Possible Increased Incidence of Cancer in West Cumbria" (HMSO 1984).

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people in the district of Edinburgh were in receipt of supplementary benefit at 31 March.

Mr. Portillo: The total number of people in receipt of supplementary benefit on 17 November 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, from the five Edinburgh local offices was 57,285.

(Source: 100 per cent. count of cases in action. This figure may, however, overstate the number of people receiving supplementary benefit. The footnote to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Hyndburn (Mr. Hargreaves) on 31 March 1988, at columns 660-61, refers.)

Single and Special Payments

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many applications for single payments and special payments were outstanding in each of his Department's social security offices serving the district of Edinburgh at 1 April and 1 May, respectively; and what extra resources are being made available to deal with any outstanding applications.

Mr. Portillo: The district of Edinburgh is served by five social security offices, although their boundaries are not conterminous with that of the district council. Information for the dates requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost, but figures are given in the table for the closest dates for which figures were collected.

The marked rise in single payment claims between 29 March and 3 May was due in large part to take-up campaigns organised by the Confederation of Scottish Local Authorities, and a large number of other groups. All claims were examined on receipt and priority has been given to urgent cases. All Scottish offices received an additional allocation of manpower resources to achieve the conversion of supplementary benefit cases to income support in the year to April 1988. This extra manpower resource has been carried forward into the first three months of this financial year to aid the clearance of residual supplementary benefit work. In addition central management has authorised overtime working and the employment of additional temporary staff in the Edinburgh offices to clear outstanding single payment and additional requirement work. Central management in Scotland is keeping the situation under close review.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are his Department's target reductions in energy usage for 1988-89; what is his Department's target reduction in electricity usage for lighting in 1988-89; and what investment his Department is planning to make in new energy efficient lighting equipment in 1988-89 to achieve those target reductions.

Mr. Portillo: We have introduced a programme of energy management, including "spend to save" initiatives, with the object of an overall reduction in energy consumption. No specific savings target has been set for 1988-89, but a target is being developed for future years. Lighting systems will not normally be replaced by more energy efficient equipment until the end of their useful life, but in particular circumstances replacement systems are considered.

Departmental Staff (Edinburgh)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what were the staffing levels designated by his Department for each of his Department's social security offices serving the district of Edinburgh for the years 1987-88 and 1988-89, respectively; and how many staff were in post in each of the offices at 1 May.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Office	Complement 1987-88	Complement 1988-89	Staff in post 1 May 1988
Edinburgh City ILO	188	161	176
Edinburgh East ILO	166	142	158
Edinburgh North ILO	168	151	162·5
Edinburgh South ILO	182	161·5	170
Edinburgh West ILO	169	155·5	167·5

ILO = Integrated Local Office.

Great Ormond Street Hospital

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras on 11 May, Official Report, column 121, whether the Hospitals for Sick Children special health authority or its officers ever informally inquired of the Government whether they would be willing to fully fund the refurbishment of Great Ormond street hospital.

Mrs. Currie: In preliminary discussions about this proposal, the possibility of full funding by the Government was raised but it was accepted very early on by both sides that the size of the scheme sought by the authority made this impossible given the time scale which the authority believed was desirable. It was agreed therefore that the best solution to enable the project to proceed rapidly was for a joint approach to funding, with the Government supporting the efforts of the public at large. I am delighted to learn that these efforts are meeting such success.

Cancer Screening

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards a full universal cancer screening programme; what estimates of the cost and benefits of such a scheme have been made by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 13 May 1988]: Before a screening method for any cancer was introduced on a routine basis it would need to be assessed against the principles of screening formulated for the World Health Organisation (WHO). These include:

there should be a suitable test which is acceptable to the population, treatment of the disease at an early stage should be of more benefit than treatment started at a later stage, the chance of physical or psychological harm to those screened should be less than the chance of benefit, the cost of a screening programme should be balanced against the benefit it provides.

There are over 200 different cancers and, as yet, no established screening tests for most of them individually, or a universal test, which would meet the WHO criteria. The question of introducing a full universal screening programme has not, therefore, been considered.

Screening for breast and cervical cancer meets the WHO criteria and national programmes have therefore been set up. Research is being undertaken into possible screening for other cancers.

Residential Care

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he will take to improve the provisions for the special needs of members of ethnic minority groups in residential care.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 28 April 1988]: The Department's Social Services Inspectorate examined aspects of services for ethnic groups in 24 authorities in 1986 and reports have been sent to each participating social services department with advice on how to improve their provision for these groups. Further work by the inspectorate is being planned. The Department is funding three projects aimed at assisting social services authorities in the development of services for ethnic minority groups.

The residential care needs of ethnic minority groups was one of the issues touched on in the independent review of residential care chaired by Lady Wagner. We will be considering Lady Wagner's report further in the light of Sir Roy Griffiths' report on community care and of reactions to both reports and will bring forward our own proposals in due course.

Rating Reform

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of raising the cut-off point for community charge rebates in respect of individual's capital allowances from £6,000 to £10,000.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 28 April 1988]: We estimate, on the basis of current assumptions about levels of community charge and the operation of the rebate scheme, that the difference in benefit expenditure between a capital cut-off at £6,000 and one at £10,000 for community charge rebates would be £30 million. Our intention is that the level of capital cut-off for community charge rebates will be in line with that for housing benefit, currently £8,000.

Debt Counselling

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has information on the number of debt counselling cases handled by citizens advice bureaux in Scotland in each of the last 10 years; and if he will give the grant-in-aid for each of these years.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is as follows:

Mr. Alex Pagett

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will enumerate and list the occasions on which Mr. Alex Pagett has visited offices of his Department since resigning from the SIO; and for what purposes.

Mr. Rifkind: Since resigning from the SIO, Mr. Pagett has occasionally visited the Scottish Office in London in order to liaise with Ministers and my special adviser. He has also visited the Scottish Office in Edinburgh on one occasion for a meeting with a Minister.

Tranquillisers

Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has any evidence of doctors overprescribing Temazepam, Temgesics, Diazepam and Lorazepam tablets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have no evidence which suggests that doctors in general are prescribing greater quantities of these drugs than are required for the treatment of their patients. Arrangements exist for the routine monitoring of doctors' prescribing of all drugs and where there is any irregularity the health board will investigate and the doctor may be called upon to justify his prescribing. In only a very few isolated instances have there been such investigations into the prescribing of these drugs. Nevertheless in view of concerns about the use of Temazepam and Temgesic by drug addicts the prescribing of these drugs is being specially monitored at present.

Further Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many pupils, and what percentage, remained in full-time education after 16 and 17 years of age in each local authority in 1978-79 and the latest date available and the total for Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Estimates for Scotland as a whole are given below. Information for individual education authorities is not readily available.

Rents

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table showing the average level of (a) local authority rents, (b) fair rents registered for unfurnished lettings and (c) market rents charged outwith the fair rent system, in each year since 1979, indicating the percentage increase in each on an annual and a cumulative basis; and what were the changes in the retail prices index over the same period.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No information is held centrally on rents which are not registered. The remainder of the information is given in the table.

Housing Capital Projects

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list (a) the bids made by local housing authorities and (b) the allocations that he has made to each of them for consent to spend on housing capital projects in 1988-89.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Bids for 1988-89 and the related final gross capital allocations, issued in March 1988, are given in the table.

Atmospheric Radioactive Contamination

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what equipment is available to his Department for the detection of radioactive contamination in the atmosphere, and if any new equipment has been acquired for this purpose since the Chernobyl accident.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Atomic Energy Research Establishment at Harwell operates three air sampling stations in Scotland. In addition civil and nuclear establishments, the National Radiological Protection Board and some academic and research centres in Scotland undertake routine monitoring of the atmosphere for radioactivity. All results are available to the Scottish Office.

Under the national response plan for dealing with nuclear accidents overseas, some 80 monitoring stations will be established in the United Kingdom, of which about 26 will be in Scotland. They will measure gamma dose rates, but a number of sites yet to be determined will also be equipped to measure air concentrations. Some 46 monitoring sites will be established this year (20 in Scotland) and the balance within two years.

Pre-Five Services

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he has any plans to advise or assist regional councils to integrate pre-five services;

(2) whether he has any plans to encourage regional councils to expand (i) nursery education, (ii) day care nurseries, and (iii) childminding services;

(3) what assistance he will give to regional councils to enable them to target pre-five services to priority groups including handicapped children, children with language difficulties, and children living in low-income households;

(4) whether he will take steps to ensure that pre-five provision is more responsive to the needs of the community.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Our current policy is to look to local authorities to determine the nature and scale of services for the pre-fives within their areas, in the light of the resources available to them and according to their own priorities.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to provide either capital allocation or capital grants to enable regional councils to improve provision of pre-five services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Allocations are made to regional and island authorities for capital expenditure on education and social work services. It is for authorities to decide what place improvement of provision for the pre-fives takes on their priorities for capital expenditure. Under the urban programme pre-fives projects in eligible areas may qualify for capital grants

Parenthood Education

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take steps to promote parenthood education in secondary shcools.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: A joint working group of the Scottish Examination Board and the Scottish Consultative Council on the Curriculum is currently developing proposals for short courses in health studies suitable for secondary pupils from age 14. Their report, which will shortly be circulated for consultation, includes proposals for a 40-hour short course on parenthood.

Parentcraft Classes

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he will take steps to promote parentcraft classes at clinics for mothers and fathers;

(2) whether he has any plans to provide better and more local ante-natal and post-natal care and support.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is for individual health boards to determine, in the light of the resources available to them, the appropriate provision for ante-natal and post-natal care and support in their areas and how these services should be organised.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing, for each local authority in Scotland, the number of employees on a full-time equivalent basis in local authority direct labour organisations for each year since 1979 and the percentage annual change.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: This information is not held centrally. However, statistics published annually by the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy since 1983-84 show that the total number of DLO staff employed by Scottish local authorities was as follows:

1983-84	1984-85		1985-86		1986-87

Housing Benefit

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, during the course of his visit to Renfrew, West and Inverclyde, to open the Gledoch House hotel on 6 June, he will agree to meet constituents of the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde to discuss their housing problems in the light of recent changes in the benefits system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No. The hon. Member may wish to write to me; but questions on housing benefit policy are best addressed to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services.

Rating Reform

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) how many meetings have been held to discuss procedures to be followed for registration for the community charge of Her Majesty's forces personnel based in Scotland on temporary postings;

(2) when his office expects to complete consideration of the community charge position of service families living in Ministry of Defence married quarters.

Mr. Lang: In general adult service personnel and their families who are solely or mainly resident in the area of a local authority will require to register for and pay the personal community charge in the normal manner. The position of those service personnel in Scotland who are exceptionally mobile and for whom individual registration for the personal community charge would be impracticable is the subject of continuing discussion between the Scottish Office and the Ministry of Defence.

Disabled People

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employers have been taken to court in Scotland in each of the last five years for failure to implement the one-third quota of disabled people in their firms.

Mr. Lang: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the 3 per cent. quota.

There have been no such prosecutions in Scotland under the Disabled Persons (Employment) Act 1944 during the last five years.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the take-up in Scotland of grants available to firms to assist them with adaptions to help them employ registered disabled people; and if he will list the firms and the sums allocated to each firm.

Mr. Lang: Grants totalling £22,343 were made to 11 employers in Scotland during 1987-88 to assist registered disabled people into employment. It is not Government policy to publish details of individual employers benefiting.

Forestry

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the names, locations and areas of plantations in the Dornoch forest district planted by the Forestry Commission in 1987-88; and if he will list similar information for those areas proposed to be planted in 1988-89 and 1989-90.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information for 1987-88 is as follows:

Name	Location	Area (hectares)
Achairn	Caithness	94
Rowens	Caithness	44
Dyke	North Sutherland	168
Achormlarie	East Sutherland	257
Ledmore	South Sutherland	50
Dalnessie	South Sutherland	251
Invershin	South Sutherland	173
Lochies	South Sutherland	16

The commission's planting programmes for 1988-89 and 1989-90 have not yet been decided.

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what wildlife surveys or environmental assessments the Forestry Commission is carrying out or commissioning, or requiring of applicants for forestry grant, in order to determine the effect of new afforestation proposals in Sutherland and Caithness on the wildlife populations of that area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Forestry Commission is consulting the Nature Conservancy Council at present over all afforestation proposals in Sutherland and Caithness. This enables the council to set out its views on the likely effect of afforestation on wildlife populations.

Departmental Correspondence (Confidentiality)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if, pursuant to his answer of 12 April, Official Report, column 44, he will make a further statement about the progress of the inquiry into the unauthorised disclosure of correspondence between the Prime Minister's private office and his Department relating to opting out by schools.

Mr. Rifkind: No; in accordance with normal practice this is not a matter about which I am prepared to give any details.

Mentally Ill Persons

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many (a) registered mentally ill and (b) mentally handicapped patients there were in the Greater Glasgow health board area in 1979, and in each year until 1987; and how many staff were employed with groups in the mentally ill sector and in the mentally handicapped sector in 1979 and in each year until 1983.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 3 May 1988]: Information is not available centrally in the precise form requested. The following tables show the relevant available statistics.

[1] Provisional data. Information on patients at 31 December 1987 is not yet available.
[2] Mental illness figures include patients in psychogeriatric facilities and the staff caring for them.
[3] For doctors, mental illness includes the specialties: mental illness, child and adolescent psychiatry and psychotherapy. It excludes forensic psychiatry. Doctors are classified by the specialty as per the contract of employment. A number of doctors classified under mental illness will have responsibility for mental handicap patients.
[4] Includes senior administrative nurses but does not take account of such nurses with more than one functional (specialty) responsibility. Some nurses working in the community psychiatric role may be included in the data but these nurses are not separately identified centrally. The individual nurse lines may not sum to the total because of rounding of the figures.

DEFENCE

Genetically Engineered Micro-organisms

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if there are any research projects or proposals which will result in the testing or release of genetically engineered micro-organisms for defensive or offensive purposes by employees or agents of his Department;

(2) what provisions he intends to take to ensure that the technology for hostile or mischievous release of genetically manipulated micro-organisms does not become freely available.

Mr. Sainsbury: All work carried out by my Department in connection with genetically engineered micro-organisms is designed to provide protection for our armed forces against the possible use of biological agents by an aggressor. No work is done for offensive purposes. There are no current research projects which would involve the release of any such micro-organisms to the environment. All such work complies fully with the procedures operated by the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Allan Roberts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to discover from the United States Department of Defence whether it has plans to develop and test genetically engineered micro-organisms capable of disrupting agricultural productivity following the release into the environment.

Mr. Sainsbury: Programmes undertaken by the United States Department of Defence are a matter for the United States Government. However, I understand that all testing for protective purposes of genetically engineered organisms undertaken by the United States Department of Defence, as permitted by the 1972 biological weapons convention, is closely scrutinised by the United States Environment Protection Agency, and that there is no risk to agricultural production.

Stornoway Airport

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many simulated air attacks on Stornoway airport were carried out in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Simulated air attacks on Stornoway airport have taken place from time to time between the six weeks of the year when Stornoway is activated for military exercises. There is no requirement for these to be recorded systematically and there is thus no precise figure available for 1987. Since the airfield was last activated in September 1987, it is estimated that there have been less than 10 simulated attacks.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates the planned noise survey will be carried out at Stornoway airport.

Mr. Freeman: Arrangements have been made for the noise survey to take place from 11 to 15 July inclusive to coincide with the first military exercise at RAF Stornoway this year. I shall write to the hon. Member when the results of the survey are available.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the next deployment of aircraft from the fleet requirements and air direction unit to Stornoway airport is planned.

Mr. Freeman: It is not the Department's policy to reveal advance information of this type about its operational activities.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many practice approaches were carried out by military aircraft at Stornoway airport in 1987.

Mr. Freeman: Records of practice approaches by military aircraft at Stornoway airport were not kept prior to September 1987 and are not maintained during those periods when the airfield is activated for military exercises. Records kept by Highlands and Islands Airports Ltd. since the last military activation period between 7 and 18 September indicate that practice approaches by military aircraft average some 10 per month.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what facilities are currently provided at Stornoway airport for United States Navy maritime patrol aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: There are no facilities currently provided at RAF Stornoway specifically for United States Navy maritime patrol aircraft, though such aircraft could use the airfield in the normal way, subject to their obtaining appropriate clearance.

Air Defence Exercises

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what activities will be carried out at Stornoway airport during Exercise Elder Joust;

(2) when the next air defence exercise in the Priory series is due to take place.

Mr. Freeman: The Exercise Priory series is to be replaced by the Exercise Elder Joust series, the first of which is scheduled to take place in October. Planning for this exercise is in its early stages. If RAF Stornoway is to be utilised the appropriate authorities will be notified in accordance with standing arrangements.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what activities will be carried out at Stornoway airport during Exercise Teamwork. .

Mr. Freeman: Plans for this exercise have yet to be finalised. If RAF Stornoway is to be utilised the appropriate authorities will be notified in accordance with standing arrangements.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what deficiencies were identified in fighter reaction times to air threats to the north-west of the United Kingdom during the recent Exercise Elder Forest.

Mr. Freeman: An evaluation of this exercise is still under way, but preliminary indications are that it successfully achieved the aim of testing certain of the United Kingdom's air defence forces. It is not, however, the practice to reveal in detail operational lessons learnt from such exercises.

Flight Refuelling Limited

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Western Isles on 22 April, Official Report, column 578, which services are provided to his Department by Flight Refuelling Limited under each of its three contracts with his Department.

Mr. Freeman: The services provided comprise the piloting and maintenance of Royal Navy Canberra and Hunter aircraft, the supply of crewed Falcon aircraft and the provision of target towing, silent target, threat simulation and electronic warfare services using these aircraft for the Royal Navy.

Benbecula (Low Flying)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for the Western Isles on 22 April, Official Report, column 579, what was the appropriate action taken by the United States authorities in respect of the incident over Benbecula involving a United States Air Force F-111 on 12 September 1983.

Mr. Freeman: I have nothing to add to the replies I gave the hon. Member on 5 February and 22 April 1988, at columns 791 and 579 respectively.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for the Western Isles on 22 April, Official Report, column 579, what changes were made to the regulations governing low level flying and simulated attacks on Benbecula airfield following the incident involving a United States Air Force F-111 on 12 September 1983.

Mr. Freeman: No such amendment has been considered necessary.

Air-Sea Rescue

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors are being taken into account in his review of the future location of Royal Air Force and Royal Navy air-sea rescue detachments.

Mr. Freeman: The review is being conducted by the Ministry of Defence in consultation with the Department of Transport, and is taking into account both the military search and rescue requirement and the needs of civil search and rescue, as recommended by the helicopter coverage group.

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what instructions have been given to the officers and men of the search and rescue squadron based at RAF Leuchars in connection with the redeployment of the squadron.

Mr. Freeman: No such instructions have been issued. I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 20 April 1988, at column 504.

European Fighter Aircraft

Mr. Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the four nations memorandum of understanding (MOU) for full development of the European fighter aircraft has yet been signed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: I am pleased to confirm that the memorandum of understanding for the development phase of the European fighter aircraft (EFA) programme was signed in Bonn today by Germany, Italy and the United Kingdom. The signature of Spain is expected as soon as Spanish Government processes have been completed.

As I told the House on 25 April, at column 22, EFA will fulfil a vital defence need in the best and most cost-effective way. It will continue the trend of successful European collaboration in aerospace. It will ensure that our industry remains in the forefront of this technology to the end of the century and beyond, while ensuring the best possible value for money for the taxpayer.

TRANSPORT

Motorways

2. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the value of the motorway schemes in the national road programme in relation to the total value of the programme.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Thirty-four motorway schemes are under construction or in preparation at a value of more than £1,150 million compared with a total value for the national road programme of £5 billion.

32. Mr. Page: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what proportion of motorways under construction form part of the total mileage of trunk roads under construction.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Almost one quarter of the total trunk road mileage under construction is motorway.

Safety at Sea

8. Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if his Department has conducted any research on the effect of competition on passenger safety at sea; and if he will make a statement.

17. Mr. Galloway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest assessment of the implications of competition with the Channel tunnel for the level of passenger safety standards on ferries.

Mr. Channon: Research of the kind suggested would not be fruitful, since passenger safety must always remain an overriding priority, whilst competition is aimed at improving efficiency and service to customers.

19. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the implications of competition for standards of passenger safety at sea.

Mr. Channon: None. Work of this kind would not be fruitful, since passenger safety must always remain paramount, while competition is aimed at improving efficiency and service to customers.

30. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the public concerning the implications for passenger safety of the Dover ferries dispute between National Union of Seamen members and the P and O company.

Mr. David Mitchell: I have received a number of representations from hon. Members and members of the public since this dispute began. Most of these in fact related to the working arrangements for officers, who are represented by Numast, rather than to the NUS dispute itself. Since P and O and Numast reached agreement on new working arrangements some weeks ago, I have had very few representations on the dispute or on safety questions.

Air Traffic Control

9. Mr. Clelland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the capacity of United Kingdom air traffic control to keep pace with air traffic in United Kingdom air space throughout the next 10 years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Civil Aviation Authority, which is responsible jointly with the Ministry of Defence for the planning and provision of air traffic services, is currently working on an assessment of air space capacity and the options for dealing with the expected demand.

Light Rail Public Transport Services

15. Mr. Litherland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards providing subsidies for fares on light rail public transport services.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government's policy towards providing subsidies for light rail service is set out in their recent response to the third report of the Transport Select Committee on the financing of rail services. Broadly, the Government expect users to pay through fares the benefit they receive from rail services, but subsidies may be payable to reflect external benefits which cannot be captured through revenues.

Fares

16. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy towards the setting of fare levels for public transport services.

Mr. David Mitchell: The setting of fares is a matter for the operators or, in the case of bus services supported by local authorities, for those authorities.

26. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to promote reductions in bus fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Bus fares are a matter for the operators concerned. The competition successfully introduced by deregulation has reduced operators' costs, which should help contain increases in fares.

27. Mr. Bradley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest information on the level of public transport fares in passenger transport authority areas.

Mr. David Mitchell: As I stated in reply to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) on 12 May, the average fare per journey for adult single local bus tickets in the financial year 1986-87 was some 33p in the metropolitan areas. Comparable data for rail fares in the metropolitan areas are not available.

31. Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest information about fare levels for local bus services.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave on Thursday 12 May to the hon. Member for St. Helens, North (Mr. Evans) at columns 236-7.

39. Mr. Doran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to promote reductions in rail fares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Within the overall framework of objectives the Government have set it, it is for British Rail to decide what level of fares to charge for its services. I would not normally expect it to reduce fares unless it improved its financial performance. Our general policies on subsidies for rail services are set out in the Government's observations on the third report of the Transport Select Committee (House of Commons Paper 420, Annex C).

43. Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his latest information about trends in public transport fares.

Mr. David Mitchell: The latest available data on fares on local buses are given in table 2.35 of Department of Transport statistics bulletin (88)29: "Bus and Coach Statistics Great Britain 1986-87" and for trains they are given in the last columns of tables 6 and 7 of Department of Transport statistics bulletin (88)13: "Quarterly Transport Statistics". Copies of both publications are in the Library of the House.

Rail Electrification

20. Mrs. Gillian Shephard: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many rail electrification schemes have been approved by Her Majesty's Government since 1983.

Mr. David Mitchell: Since 1983 the Government have approved seven electrification schemes, worth over £500 million. In addition the Government have approved a package of Channel tunnel-related investment including some £30 million of electrification work. British Rail has itself approved a further nine smaller schemes.

Nottingham-Bulwell-Mansfield Railway

21. Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received with regard to the re-opening of the railway line from Nottingham through Bulwell to Mansfield.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which I gave him on 14 January 1988, at columns 358-59. Since that time my right hon. Friend has received two further representations, from Nottinghamshire county council and from a member of the public.

Air Passengers (Compensation)

22. Mr. Maxwell-Hyslop: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the limits on damages which passengers on international scheduled flights can receive for death or injury pursuant to the Hague protocol to the Warsaw convention were last revised; and whether he will approach the co-signatories to secure agreement that these limits should be indexed annually in accordance with some parameter of value.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest amendments to the Warsaw convention — the Montreal protocols — were drawn up in 1975, and would raise the compensation limit to about £79,000. The protocols require 30 ratifications to bring them into force. So far only eight countries, including the UK, have ratified, and we are doing all we can to persuade other states to follow suit. These protocols provide for limited inflation increases of the liability limits.

Central London (Cars)

23. Ms. Abbott: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to restrict the number of cars coming into central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Our policy on traffic management in London is set out in circular 2/87.

Glasgow Airport

24. Mr. David Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans he has to allow intercontinental and long-haul flights to land and take off at Glasgow airport, Abbotsinch.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The policy for the Scottish Lowlands airports remains that set out in the 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy" (Cmnd. 9542): that intercontinental and long-haul flights are only exceptionally allowed to use Glasgow and Edinburgh airports, but that this policy will be reviewed if Prestwick airport's financial results have not shown a steady improvement by 1989.

Personal Stereos

25. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the outcome of his studies on the road safety implications concerning users of personal stereos.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A Transport and Road Research Laboratory hospital-based study of cycling accidents revealed no instances when the use of personal stereos have been a contributory factor in any of the accidents. All road users — and vulnerable ones in particular — should make sure they are able to concentrate fully on driving or riding. They should avoid unnecessary sources of distraction.

Rear Seat Belts

28. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will introduce legislation to require rear seat belts to be installed in all new passenger cars.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Road Vehicle (Construction and Use) Regulations were amended in 1986 to require all cars first used from 1 April 1987 to be fitted with adult seat belts or child restraints of an approved type.

Rear seat belt anchorages have been obligatory on all new cars first used from 1 April 1982.

The seat belt amendment Bill introduced by my hon. Friend the Member for Cheadle (Mr. Day) was given its Third reading on Friday 13 May.

British Rail

29. Mr. Martyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

37. Mr. Ray Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next expects to meet the chairman of British Rail; and what subjects he expects to discuss.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Members to the answer my right hon. Friend gave the hon. Members for Swansea, East (Mr. Anderson) and for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) earlier today.

North Report

33. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received seeking changes in his policy for road safety following the publication of the North report on road traffic law.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The North report has generated a considerable amount of interest. We welcome public reaction to the recommendations. We are pressing ahead with our consideration of the recommendations as quickly as possible. We shall report to the House on our progress before the summer recess.

Road Pricing

34. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is Her Majesty's Government's policy towards introducing road pricing in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Road pricing is an interesting idea. It raises practical issues. There are currently no plans to introduce it in London.

Public Transport (Women)

36. Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department has given to the special needs of women using public transport.

Mr. David Mitchell: In their formulation of policy towards public transport the Government have well in mind the importance of bus and rail services to women, who have, in general, less access to private cars and greater fears for their personal safety.

Civil Aviation Safety

38. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received about standards of civil aviation safety in the United Kingdom.

Mr. David Mitchell: My right hon. Friend receives from time to time representations from various sources about the standards of civil aviation safety in the United Kingdom. These are normally referred to the Civil Aviation Authority, the body responsible for civil aviation safety regulation.

Railway Stations, Cornwall

40. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from the transport users' consultative committee concerning the state of repair of railway stations in Cornwall.

Mr. David Mitchell: None. But I understand that it has put some proposals to British Rail.

Coaches (Vehicle Excise Duty)

41. Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received regarding the level of evasion of the vehicle excise duty paid in respect of coaches.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: No recent representations have been made on the extent of evasion of the duty payable on coaches. The national survey of VED evasion in 1984 did not identify coaches as a source of significant revenue loss. We are not aware of evidence to suggest that evasion among this vehicle group is exceptional.

Severn Bridge

42. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on progress on the current repairs on the Severn bridge and the likely completion date; and what is the latest estimated final cost.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Work is currently in progress on the supply of new hangers for the suspension bridge, for the major strengthening works on the crossing and for protection of river piers. Resurfacing work is expected to start next year. The programme for completion of all works by the end of 1990 remains on target. The current estimate for the whole scheme is £56 million.

Traffic Flows (London)

44. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his assessment of the level of congestion and speed of traffic flows on roads in London for which he is responsible; and what equivalent information he has for five and 10 years ago, respectively; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest information is for the period 1983 to 1986 when the average speed of traffic on trunk roads in London is estimated to have been 34 kph (21 mph) in the morning peak period, 46 kph (29 mph) in the daytime off-peak period and 37 kph (23 mph) in the evening peak period. A new survey of average traffic speeds on the strategic London road network of trunk and designated roads is now in progress. Results are expected in the late summer.

Equivalent information for five and 10 years ago is not available, but estimates of traffic speeds on a category of roads called primary roads, as defined in the Greater London development plan, were published by the Greater London council. The GLC's network of primary roads contained a high proportion of roads in common with London's trunk road network prior to 1 April 1986. Results over the requested period are as follows:—

Average traffic speeds on primary roads
Kilometres per hour[1]

Time of day	Survey period 1977-79	1980-82	1983-86
Morning peak period (7am-10am)	36·8(23·0)	41·9(26·2)	39·8(24·9)
Daytime off-peak period (10am-4pm)	56·8(35·5)	58·1(36·3)	58·4(36·5)
Evening peak period (4pm-7pm)	43·5(27·2)	47·7(29·8)	44·2(27·6)

[1] Figures in brackets denote speeds in miles per hour.

Tourist Buses (Central London)

45. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received about the implications for traffic congestion of the parking of tourist buses in central London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Very few. Primary responsibility for the parking of tourist coaches lies with the local authorities and the operators. We keep a close watch on the position. The code of practice recently launched by the Bus and Coach Council will encourage better parking.

Civil Air Traffic

46. Mr. John Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what increase in United Kingdom civil air traffic he expects during the next two years.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is not available in the precise form requested. The last Department of Transport forecasts, published in 1986, estimated United Kingdom demand for air travel in 1990 in the range 83·2 to 98·9 million passengers per annum. The Department is currently working on new forecasts which are expected to be published before the end of the year.

Channel Tunnel

47. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to fund the development of rail freight interchanges in the north-east, in preparation for the opening of the Channel tunnel.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am prepared to authorise any commercially worthwhile investment by British Rail related to the Channel tunnel, but direct financial assistance from the Government is ruled out by section 42 of the Channel Tunnel Act. Investment in privately owned interchange facilities may qualify separately for grants where there are clearly measurable environmental benefits.

Manchester Airport

48. Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what recent representations he has received from Manchester airport about the airport's future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A number of representations have been received about transatlantic services. The Government made clear in the 1985 White Paper "Airports Policy" that it is committed to the justified development of Manchester and other regional airports.

London Transport Strategies

49. Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has received the report on transport strategies for London from the London planning advisory committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: No.

London Air Traffic Control Centre

50. Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last visited the London air traffic control centre; and what was the purpose of his visit.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: My right hon. Friend visited the centre on 19 February to see the important work which is done there.

London Underground (Staffing)

51. Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will meet the chairman of London Regional Transport to discuss the reduction of full-time cleaning staff on the London Underground subsequent to the King's Cross fire disaster.

52. Ms. Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed with the chairman of London Regional Transport the programme of cuts in station staff now being implemented on the London Underground; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport has kept me informed of developments following the fire at King's Cross and I meet the chairman of London Regional Transport from time to time as the need arises. However, staffing levels are for London Regional Transport to determine in the light of their statutory duty to have due regard to safety, efficiency and economy of operation.

North Devon Link Road

53. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what date he expects the north Devon link road to be completed; how much it will have cost; and how many properties have been demolished along the route from Tiverton to Barnstaple.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We expect the north Devon link road to be completed about the middle of next year. It will have cost some £63 million to construct between the M5 and Barnstaple. By completion seven properties will have been demolished between Tiverton and Barnstaple.

Rail Services (Subsidy)

Mr. McTaggart: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the annual subsidy for rail services in each of the last five years for (a) the United Kingdom, (b) France, (c) Germany, (d) Italy, (e) Holland and (f) Denmark.

Mr. David Mitchell: Figures for Government support for British Rail since 1983 are given below. The figures include grant in compensation for the passenger obligation under EEC Regulation 1191/69 (section 39 of the Railways Act 1974 and section 56 of the Transport Act 1981) and grant in respect of EEC Regulation 1192/69.

	£ million
1983	873·0
1984-85	1,088·9
1985-86	839·7
1986-87	733·4
1987-88	815·6

1984-85 is a 15-month period reflecting a change in the British Railways Board financial year. The figures for 1985-86, 1986-87 and 1987-88 remain provisional; final claims have not been agreed. All figures are cash.

The most recent information available to the Department on the revenues, costs and public subsidy levels of the European Community's railway systems is contained in the eighth Commission report on the transposed annual accounts of railway undertakings for 1984 (COM(87)311 final). A copy of this and of the transposed annual accounts for 1983 (COM(86)353 final) are in the Library of the House. There are substantial variations between countries in accounting systems and in the arrangements for financial support, so the figures contained in the report only provide a broad comparison.

London Docklands (Rail Services)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will assess the relative costs of developing existing railway facilities from north-east London to docklands to integrate the service with the docklands light railway system as against other proposed methods of relieving congestion on the Central line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Various possibilities for developing railway facilities from north-east London to Docklands are being considered by London Regional Transport in conjunction with the London Docklands Development Corporation and British Rail as part of a study of a public transport strategy for Docklands. Any proposals made will take into account the implications for the rest of the public transport network and the work being done in the Central London rail study, in which the Department is participating with London Regional Transport and British Rail.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates have been made of the cost of the proposed docklands light railway extension to south of the Thames.

Mr. David Mitchell: London Regional Transport and the London Docklands Development Corporation are examining the possibility of an extension of the Docklands light railway in some detail as part of their study of a public transport strategy for Docklands. A firm estimate of the cost of such an extension is not yet available.

Civil Air Traffic

Mr. Murphy

Mr. Peter Bottomley

and 109.4 mppa in 2000. On a lower economic growth scenario the forecasts were 83.2, 98.1 and 113.8 mppa respectively. We expect to publish new forecasts towards the end of the year.

Dangerous Goods

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received on the problems in Holland and Germany arising from the level of training of British drivers of trucks loaded with explosives.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There have been occasional representations about the practice in United Kingdom not to issue a special certificate for drivers trained in explosives work.

We have been discussing with the CBI and the Health and Safety Executive the development of an approved national training scheme for drivers of vehicles carrying explosives. This will give them a certificate and will be used to negotiate reciprocal recognition with the authorities in the Netherlands and the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what representations he has received from Mr. Ian Rycroft, transport director of EC Transport, Dorset, calling for the United Kingdom authorities to design and authorise a course of instructions acceptable to other contracting states of the ADR agreement on international carriage of dangerous goods by road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: A telex message.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he intends to bring the regulations on the transport of ammunition by road up to the standards of the ADR agreement on international carriage of dangerous goods by road.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The United Kingdom is a signatory of the ADR agreement and is involved in keeping it up to date.

I explained to the hon. Member on 18 April that we intend to make the Road Traffic (Carriage of Explosives) Regulations later this summer. These regulations will be in line with the revised ADR provisions covering the carriage of explosives by road that are due to come into effect from 1 January 1990. Both will be more comprehensive than the current ADR provisions.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has as to the extent to which the authorities in Holland and Germany provide additional locally trained drivers on British trucks carrying explosives in their countries because of the level of training of United Kingdom drivers.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In the Netherlands and the Federal Republic of Germany such a requirement is imposed upon foreign vehicles carrying explosives, notwithstanding the existence of the international road transport agreement, ADR.

Offshore Installations (Standby Vessels)

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to place before Parliament proposals to amend the practice contained in the document "Assessment of the Suitability of Standby Vessels Attending Off-Shore Installations"; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: Following earlier consultations a revised draft of the amendments was circulated to interested organisations for further comment. Officials are now studying the replies that have been received. Compliance with the recommendations in the document is voluntary and it is essential that its terms are acceptable to all concerned.

As a non-statutory code it does not need to be placed before Parliament but I will arrange for copies to be deposited in the Library when the document is finalised.

Saltash Bypass

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the reasons for the delay in the opening of the Saltash bypass; what action he proposes taking to minimise this delay; and what is the new projected date for the completion of the bypass.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The contract for the construction of Saltash bypass was originally due to be completed by the end of July. Work has taken longer than anticipated because of unexpected construction difficulties. We are pressing the contractors to complete the works as quickly as possible. We hope to open the bypass before the end of the summer. In the meantime, we are considering whether any special steps can be taken to reduce delays during peak holiday traffic periods.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Graham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what plans there are to fly nuclear waste out of Glasgow airport; and what discussions are proposed with local authorities on this matter.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There are no such plans.

Associated British Ports (No. 2) Bill

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he last met the chairman of Associated British Ports; whether he discussed the Associated British Ports (No. 2) Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: In the debate on the Associated British Ports (No. 2) Bill on 11 May I explained to the hon. Member that I had not met the chairman of Associated British Ports in respect of the Bill and, further, that I had no knowledge of whether any other Minister or officials in the Department of Transport had done so.

Subsequent inquiries show that some months ago, on 24 February my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the chairman of Associated British Ports, and their discussion did indeed cover the (No. 2) Bill.

Bristol Channel

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many cases have been reported in each of the last five years of ships cleaning their tanks or discharging ships' refuse into the Bristol channel; how many prosecutions have been brought; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is not in itself an offence for ships to clean their tanks in the Bristol channel, or, at present, to discharge ships' garbage into the sea although regulations on this are being prepared. A discharge into the sea of oil or other noxious liquid substances after tank cleaning would be an offence. The numbers of sightings of oil or noxious liquid substances in the Bristol channel reported to the marine pollution control unit are as follows:

1985	0
1986	0
1987	3
[1]1988	3

[1] To date.

Earlier figures are not readily available as none of the reports identified a particular ship as being responsible for the discharge no prosecution could be brought.

Cherished Number Plates

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any proposals to ease the transfer of cherished number plates; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We propose to reduce from five years to one the period that owners of stolen vehicles with a cherished number have to wait before they can use the number again. Details will be given to those able to benefit once work is completed on devising the most cost-effective implementation scheme. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has recently announced a consultation exercise on proposals for the Government to sell registration numbers not in use. This would make acquiring attractive numbers much easier.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 17 May 1988

PRIME MINISTER

UK-EEC (Balance of Trade)

Q21. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Prime Minister if she will raise at the next meeting of the European Council the growing imbalance in manufacturing trade between the United Kingdom and the EEC; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No. The EC is our largest market which takes about half of our exports. The removal of remaining barriers to trade by 1992 will offer British exporters a single market of over 320 million people. The Government are encouraging British business to prepare itself to take full advantage of this.

Turkey (Human Rights)

Q100. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Prime Minister if Her Majesty's Government have received any request from the Soviet Union for human rights violations in Turkey to be considered in future international arms reductions negotiations; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: No.

Retirement Pension

Q121. Sir David Price: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received seeking the introduction of measures to ensure equal treatment for men and women in respect of the age of eligibility for the basic state retirement pension; what response she has made; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: I receive such representations from time to time, most recently from the Campaign for Equal State Pension Ages. My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Health and Social Security has today replied to the campaign.

Abortion (Amendment) Bill

Q168. Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received with respect to allowing parliamentary time for completion of the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

Q169. Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received with respect to the allocation of parliamentary time for completion of the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Prime Minister what representations she has received with respect to the allocation of parliamentary time for completion of the Abortion (Amendment) Bill.

The Prime Minister: I have received many such representations, including some from hon. Members.

Engagements

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Tuesday 17 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today. This evening I hope to have an audience of Her Majesty the Queen.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Racism (Prosecutions)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Attorney-General how many successful prosecutions there have been for incitement to racial hatred in (a) the past 20 years and (b) the past five years; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: Since 1979 there have been 43 successful prosecutions for incitement to racial hatred. Of these, 16 successful prosecutions have occurred in the past five years. The figures in respect of prosecutions prior to 1979 are not kept separately and could be discovered only at disproportionate cost.

Extraditions (Irish Republic)

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Attorney-General what undertakings as to additional prosecutions against persons extradited from the Irish Republic for alleged political offences and as to the application of the speciality rule have been given to the Government of the Irish Republic following its accession to the European convention on the suppression of terrorism.

The Attorney-General: No such undertakings have been given to the Government of the Irish Republic following the entry into force of the Irish Extradition (European Convention on the Suppression of Terrorism) Act 1987.

DEFENCE

Chemical Weapons (Animal Rights)

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the issue of animal rights in relation to chemical weapons experiments will be discussed with the Soviet delegation visiting Porton Down chemical defence establishment later this month.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertfordshire, South-West (Mr. Page) on 5 May at columns 544-45.

Exercise Flintlock

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what military facilities in the United Kingdom were used by, or in support of, United States special forces units participating in the recent Flintlock exercise; what was the purpose of this exercise, and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Exercise Flintlock which is an annual exercise designed to provide mutually beneficial training for allied personnel in airborne operations, communications and ground tactical operations, is still in progress. In line with long-standing practice, elements of the United States armed forces have been deployed this year to RAF Sculthorpe, RAF West Raynham, RAF Watton and to the military training area at Stanford.

Cruise Missiles

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will inform the House of any agreement made so far at his meetings with North Atlantic Treaty Organisation colleagues concerning the deployment of sea-launched cruise missiles.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Consideration of nuclear force adjustment options is continuing within NATO; Ministers have taken no specific procurement or deployment decisions.

RAF Hawk (Crash)

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the crash of an RAF Hawk trainer plane near Newgale, Pembrokeshire, on Friday 13 May.

Mr. Freeman: I refer my hon. Friend to my letter to him dated 13 May.

Deployment Outback 88

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the ships of the Royal Navy task group deployment Outback 88 will exercise with the Brunei armed forces during their visit to Brunei.

Mr. Freeman: Yes. Ships from the RN task group will take part in a combined tri-service exercise, Setia Kawan, with elements of the Royal Brunei armed forces. In addition to the P.N ships, the United Kingdom forces taking part will comprise a brigade headquarters, a battalion group from Hong Kong and the Gurkha battalion stationed in Brunei, as well as RAF air transport aircraft.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will permit British service personnel invited to give evidence to the Gibraltar coroner at the inquest into the killings of Irish Republican Army members to give evidence; and if such personnel will be legally represented;

(2) how many British service personnel have been interviewed on behalf of the Gibraltar coroner prior to the inquest into the recent killings of Irish Republican Army members; where those personnel were interviewed; and where they are stationed;

(3) what contact the Gibraltar coroner conducting an inquest into the killings of Irish Republican Army members has had with him; what information the coroner has sought about British service personnel; and if the coroner has sought permission to interview such personnel or to require such personnel to give evidence at the inquest.

Mr. Ian Stewart [holding answer 12 May 1988]: The Ministry of Defence will co-operate with the coroner's inquest. Any interested parties in a coroner's court may be legally represented if they wish. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Linlithgow (Mr. Dalyell) on 5 May at column 544. A number of service personnel have been interviewed in the course of the police inquiries. I am not prepared to give any further details at this stage.

INF Treaty

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received seeking further reduction in the number of nuclear weapons on British soil and in British territorial waters, following the ratification of INF treaty; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: [holding answer 13 May 1988]: Various groups opposed to NATO defence policy have undertaken a lobbying campaign, including the use of stock wording and bulk-produced cards, for further reductions in nuclear weapons in Britain following the INF treaty. Such representations have been acknowledged. The United Kingdom and its NATO allies are committed to maintaining a mix of adequate and effective conventional and nuclear forces in Europe in order to continue to deter aggression and maintain peace. Complementing this element of its policy, the Alliance has a clear set of further arms control priorities following the INF treaty: a 50 per cent. reduction in United States and Soviet strategic offensive weapons; an agreement covering conventional forces in Europe; and a global chemical weapons ban.

WALES

Hospital Waiting Lists (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for non-urgent cases in Clwyd hospitals; what additional funds he will make available to the National Health Service in Clwyd; and what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for non-urgent cases in Clwyd;

(2) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for (a) general operations, (b) orthopaedic operations and (c) ear, nose and throat treatment in Clwyd;

(3) what proposals he has to reduce the waiting list for out-patient treatment in Clwyd.

Mr. Grist: The management of waiting lists is the responsibility of the relevant district health authority. Authorities have been asked to submit to the Welsh Office revised action plans which identify the continuing problem areas and put forward solutions.

A total of £2 million has been allocated to authorities in Wales over the last two years to help them implement schemes for tackling the worst waiting list problems and a further £1 million is available in the current year. Distribution of these funds is being considered in the light of the revised action plans which have just been received.

Clwyd Health Authority

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to meet Clwyd health authority to discuss the situation in the National Health Service; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: My right hon. Friend will be meeting all chairmen of health authorities next month.

Health Service (Gwent)

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet the Gwent area health authority concerning the situation in the Health Service.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 12 May 1988]: My right hon. Friend met all health authority chairmen in November 1987 and arrangments have been made for a further such meeting to be held in June this year. In addition, he also met the chairman of Gwent, Mid Glamorgan, West Glamorgan and East Dyfed on Friday last to discuss health issues relating to the south Wales valleys.

HOME DEPARTMENT

British Broadcasting Corporation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the British Broadcasting Corporation: and what items he discussed.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend is in regular touch with the chairman of the BBC on a wide range of broadcasting matters.

Asylum

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received concerning the procedures for dealing with asylum applications at a port of entry, proposed by the British Refugee Council in January; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The British Refugee Council produced a code of practice for port asylum applications last November. This was discussed at a meeting I held with a delegation from the BRC on 7 December 1987. Much of the code is consistent with our existing practice, but the Government cannot accept its proposal of an appeal system in port cases.

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the breakdown of the nationalities of the 23,000 people refused leave to enter the United Kingdom at ports in 1986; in what capacity they sought leave to enter the United Kingdom; and how many subsequently applied for asylum.

Mr. Renton: A total of 23,100 passengers (excluding European Community nationals) were refused leave to enter and removed from the United Kingdom during 1986. Their nationalities are given in table 1 of "Control of Immigration: Statistics, United Kingdom 1986" (Cm 166) copies of which are in the Library. No information is available centrally about the basis on which these passengers sought leave to enter, or of the numbers who subsequently applied for asylum, and such information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Sri Lankan Tamils

Mr. Irving: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Sri Lankan Tamils have been refused entry to the United Kingdom after being refused asylum during the past 12 months; to which countries they were removed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not available centrally. Statistics of the total numbers of grants and refusals of refugee status by nationality are published annually in the Home Office statistical bulletins "Refugee Statistics: United Kingdom", 13/87 for the 1986 edition, copies of which are available in the Library. The bulletin for 1987 should be available early next month.

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has held with the Data Protection Registrar in relation to the new police national computer.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The replacement police national computer will initially hold only the information held on the current system, and no further discussions with the Data Protection Registrar are necessary. The registrar will be consulted when plans for new applications are further advanced.

Crime Clear-up Rates

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which police forces in England and Wales have the highest and lowest crime clear-up rates, respectively, in the latest year for which figures are a available.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for Pontypridd (Mr. John) on 11 May at column 116.

Taxi Drivers (Protection)

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the steps he is taking to provide adequate protection for taxi drivers against attacks by members of the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am informed by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he considers that the presence of a partition between the driving position and the passenger compartment in a licensed taxi provides a considerable degree of protection from assault. Later models also have a central locking facility for all doors. A Department of Transport standing committee is considering the problem of violence towards road transport staff. The police are represented on that committee and an invitation has been extended to the taxi trade to take part in its deliberations

Detention

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what provisions are made for people applying for asylum whose claims of torture have been substantiated but who are still being kept in detention;

(2) if he will make a statement on the criteria used for the detention of children under the Immigration Act powers;

(3) what provisions have been made for children at Harmondsworth and other detention centres;

(4) what provisions are made for pregnant women at Harmondsworth and other detention centres.

Mr. Renton: All detention is kept to a minimum. Family groups including children or children travelling alone are detained, like others, only when they are unlikely to respect the terms of temporary admission or until alternative arrangements can be made. In the case of children travelling alone, the practice is for such arrangements to be made through social service departments of local authorities. Both family accommodation and separate rooms under suitable supervision are available.

Medical advice is routinely sought when women are known to be pregnant. Surgeries are held daily at Harmondsworth, and provisions exist for medical consultation there and elsewhere at any time. Female members of staff are specifically entrusted with the care and welfare of women and children.

Where it is found necessary to maintain detention in the case of a person whose claim of torture had been substantiated, medical help is of course available whenever needed, as it is for all detainees.

Channel Ferries (Dispute)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons have been charged from 1 May to date for (a) obstructing and (b) conspiring to obstruct the loading of passengers and freight on to the Channel ferries at Dover.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Kent that, up to 16 May, one person had been charged with obstruction of the public highway. Any alleged case of obstruction within the docks area is a matter for the Dover harbour board.

Extradition

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is proposed to introduce legislation to amend existing extradition arrangements with the Irish Republic in response to the changes made recently by the Irish Republic.

Mr. John Patten: We have no plans at present to do so.

Mr. Stanbrook: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many persons extradited from the Irish Republic to (a) Great Britain and (b) Northern Ireland, respectively, since the passing of reciprocal legislation by the United Kingdom an the Irish Republic in 1965 have not been subsequently prosecuted;

(2) how many person extradited from the Irish Republic to the United Kingdom under the terms of the Backing of Warrants (Republic of Ireland) Act 1965 have been subsequently acquitted as a result of insufficient evidence.

Mr. John Patten: I regret that this information is not collected centrally, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Makerd Rajaran Abhyankar

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to accelerate the consideration of the nationality application of Mr. Makerd Rajaran Abhyankar of 8 Argyle road, London, N18, in the light of the need of his employers, Messrs. Amstrad plc of Southend, to use his engineering skills in Europe, details of which have been sent to him.

Mr. Renton: I have not yet received the details referred to by my hon. Friend but Mr. Abhyankar's request for priority will be considered when we receive it. However, I must point out that we have over 268,000 outstanding citizenship applications in the Home Office and we are unable to give priority except in urgent compassionate circumstances, where naturalisation is necessary for an applicant's job, or where he needs to travel urgently for his career or business and cannot obtain documentation from his own authorities.

Passports

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which countries have so far agreed to accept travellers using expired United Kingdom passports or British visitors passports under the emergency arrangements announced on 31 March to help reduce delays at the passport offices; what is the extent of the present delays; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is given in the tables.

Countries accepting uncancelled United Kingdom passports expired within the last five years and British Visitor's Passports

Country	Period of Acceptance From	To	Comments
United States of America	15 April 1988	15 June 1988	Visas required
Hong Kong	1 April 1988	30 September 1988
Bahamas	1 April 1988	30 September 1988
Antigua and Barbuda	1 April 1988	30 September 1988
Belgium	8 April 1988	30 September 1988	BVPs regularly accepted
Greece	1 April 1988	30 September 1988
Luxembourg	8 April 1988	30 September 1988
Netherlands	8 April 1988	30 September 1988
West Germany[1]	18 April 1988	30 September 1988
Yugoslavia	1 April 1988	30 September 1988	Visas required with BVPs

[1]Passports must show national status of British citizen or be endorsed to confirm that the holder has a right of abode in the United Kingdom.

Israel has agreed to accept expired passports (but not BVPs) up to 30 September 1988.

Delay times for correctly-completed, non-urgent passport applications

Passport office	Delay (working days)
London	51
Glasgow	33
Peterborough	30
Newport	19
Liverpool	15

At the small Belfast office, which caters only for Northern Ireland residents, a turnround time of four working days is being maintained.

Urgent applications are given priority at all the passport offices. In addition, blocks of applications are being transferred on a regular basis from the hardest-pressed London office to Liverpool to help reduce the long delay in clearing applications posted to London.

Firearms

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will now publish details of the buy-in scheme in respect of firearms whose prohibition is proposed in the Firearms (Amendment) Bill.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The proposed "buy-in" scheme would operate for a period of three months from the date on which the relevant provisions came into force. Transitional arrangements would be introduced to allow continuing possession of the firearms involved during that period.

Payments under the scheme would be made to persons in respect of firearms which would become prohibited under the Bill and which were lawfully held by them on a firearm or shotgun certificate on or before 22 September 1987, when my right hon. Friend announced the Government's intentions in a speech to the Association of Police Superintendents. Certificate holders who acquired such firearms after that date because of a previous binding contract to purchase would also be accommodated where evidence of the contract could be produced. In addition, such holders who acquired them before and sold them after 22 September 1987 would be eligible upon production of evidence of sale.

Claimants would be required to complete a claim form obtainable from a police station or rifle or pistol club and to surrender the qualifying firearm(s). They would also have to produce the relevant firearm or shotgun certificate to the issuing police force, and police records would be noted accordingly.

We expect that most claims would be for self-loading rifles. For these, two options would be available. Claimants could apply for a fixed sum payment of £150. This figure takes account of the price which self-loading rifles of the Kalashnikov and equivalent models would have fetched at auction before my right hon. Friend's announcement of 22 September 1987. Alternatively, for the small number of firearms of considerably higher value, claimants could provide evidence of the purchase price or insurance value. Payment under this option would be 50 per cent. of the average retail value of the firearm in the summer of 1987. This formula is designed to produce the amount which in general an individual might reasonably expect to have obtained on the sale of the item at auction in the summer of 1987. Claimants who sold self-loading rifles after 22 September 1987 would be paid the difference between the sum received from the sale and the sum determined by an application under whichever of the two options were to be exercised.

In respect of all other firearms which would become prohibited, payment would be available only under the second option, and where accompanied by the relevant documentary evidence.

Any case that could not be reasonably determined by the application of these arrangements would be considered at the discretion of my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, or in Scotland at the discretion of my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

We have proposed the scheme because of the unique circumstances involved: namely, that individuals would be prohibited from holding firearms which they were previously authorised to hold by the issue of a firearm or shotgun certificate and which have lost most or all of their market value. It cannot be regarded as any sort of precedent.

Sir Eldon Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any proposals for an amnesty for firearms held illegally.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for the Home Department and for Scotland propose that an amnesty be held for one month from 1 September this year. Planning is nearing completion; further details will be announced nearer the launch date.

Broadcasting Standards Council

Mr. Knowles: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what arrangements have been made to meet the expenditure of the proposed Broadcasting Standards Council.

Mr. Hurd: Parliamentary approval to this new service has been sought in the Supply Estimates for 1988-89 (Class, XI, Vote 3—HC 339). Pending that approval, urgent expenditure estimated at £130,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the contingencies funds.

Institute of Psychiatry (Experiments)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons experiments in (a) food deprivation, (b) chronic consumption of alcohol and (c) brain lesions are still being conducted at the Maudsley laboratory of the institute of psychiatry; and when he expects such experiments to cease.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 16 February 1988]: I wrote to the hon. Member on 19 April. Copies of the letter have been placed in the Library.

Panamanian Consulate

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to whether the Panamanian consulate in Tudor street, London EC4, was searched by police officers following the bomb threat made on 2 March; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if the Panamanian ambassador was consulted with regard to police officers searching the consulate premises following the bomb threat made on 2 March; and if he will make a statement;

(3) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to the nature of the response given by the security guards on the premises of the Panamanian consulate following the bomb alert, to the advice that, in accordance with normal practice, the decision as to whether the consulate should be evacuated and searched, with police assistance, rested with them;

(4) if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to why people other than security guards already in the building were permitted by the police into the premises of the Panamanian consulate following the bomb threat communicated to New Scotland Yard at 11.2 pm on 2 March.

Mr. Douglas Hogg [holding answer 17 March 1988]: The Panamanian consulate was not searched by police officers following the bomb threat on 2 March because no request was made by the security guards on the premises for such action to be taken. The Panamanian ambassador was not consulted since it was for the security guards concerned to decide how to respond to police advice, and they subsequently elected to leave the consulate of their own volition. After the security guards had vacated the premises, a number of people who have been inside the consulate earlier that day peacefully re-entered the building using keys in their possession. The police officers who remained on duty outside the consulate had no reason on the information available to them to seek to deny entry.

Radio Surveillance Equipment

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what criteria are used by his Department when determining whether to grant licences to users of radio surveillance equipment.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

There are three main criteria which are applied to decisions about licensing radio surveillance equipment:

(1) Does it meet the necessary equipment performance requirements laid down by the Department?
(2) Are the necessary frequencies available?
(3) Is the equipment to be used for a legal purpose?

10 Downing Street (Security)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans further to review security at 10 Downing street; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: Security at 10 Downing street is kept under constant review. A number of measures have been taken recently and other steps are being actively considered.

ENVIRONMENT

Vacant Land (Bristol)

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if, pursuant to his answer of 20 April, Official Report, column 485, he will give details of the location and area of the 1,312 acres of vacant land owned by Bristol city council.

Mr. Trippier: The location and area of unused and underused land owned by Bristol city council are as follows:

Rating Reform

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will introduce legislation specifically to prohibit any information collected for benefit purposes being disclosed to the community charge officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: No. As I told the House on 20 April, at column 840, it is intended to allow the names and addresses of income support claimants to be passed to the community charges registration officer.

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will take steps to ensure that persons requested to supply information to community charge registration officers are informed that the requirement to do so within 21 days of the request does not mean that they are compelled to comply with any request to return the form immediately or within a few days of receipt.

Mr. Howard: Regulations will provide that persons requested to supply information to community charge registration officers will have 21 days in which to do so. It will be for registration officers to decide the procedures for collecting information, but these must observe the statutory time limit.

Direct Labour Organisations

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities currently operate direct labour organisations involved in the subsidised production of doors and windows; and if he will list them in the Official Report.

Mr. Chope: This information is not held centrally.

Wetlands

Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will list the criteria and guidelines for the identification of wetlands of international importance for listing under the Ramsar convention which were adopted by the third conference of contracting parties to the convention at Regina, Canada, in June 1987; and what is the extent to which the criteria and guidelines will be adopted in identifying wetlands of international importance in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan [pursuant to his reply, 11 May 1988, c. 128]: The guidelines, regarding whether a wetland could be considered for selection under criterion 1 are; if

(a) it is an example of a type rare or unusual in the appropriate biogeographical region; or

(b) it is a particularly good representative example of a wetland characteristic of the appropriate region; or

(c) it is a particularly good representative of a common type where the site also qualifies for consideration under criteria 2a, 2b or 2c; or

(d) it is representative of a type by virtue of being part of a complex of high quality wetland habitats. A wetland of national value could be considered of international importance, if it has a substantial hydrological, biological or ecological role in the functioning of an international river basin or coastal system; or

(e) in developing countries, it is a wetland which, because of its outstanding hydrological, biological or ecological role, is of substantial socio-economic and cultural value within the framework of sustainable use and habitat conservation.

Waterfowl indicative of wetland values, productivity or diversity under criterion 3b, include divers (loons), grebes, pelicans, storks, ibises, spoonbills, herons, flamingos, swans, geese, ducks, cranes, rails and coots, waders (shorebirds), gulls and terns.

The NCC has adopted these criteria and guidelines fully when identifying sites for submission either to my Department or to the Scottish Office.

The Regina conference recommended that a working group should be established in order to examine ways in which the criteria and guidelines for identifying wetlands of international importance might be further elaborated, in order to improve the worldwide application of the convention. It is expected that a report and draft recommendations will be issued to contracting parties in time for them to be discussed at the next conference of contracting parties in 1990.

Garden Festival (Stoke on Trent)

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report the full set of accounts of the national garden festival, Stoke-on-Trent.

Mr. Trippier: A private company, NGF'86 (Stoke-on-Trent, Staffordshire) Ltd. was formed by the two local authorities concerned, to design, build and operate the festival. The accounts of the company up to 31 March 1986 have already been filed at the companies registration office, in accordance with the Companies Act 1985. The company has been put into members' voluntary liquidation, and final accounts will be filed in due course as part of the liquidation procedure.

ENERGY

Dounreay (Sodium Fires)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will give details of any sodium fires at Dounreay in the period between 1976 and 1988.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a matter for the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and I have asked the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Fast Breeder Reactors

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) what is the current estimated cost of a commercial demonstration fast breeder reactor;

(2) what are his current cost projections for electricity generated by fast breeder reactors in pence per kilowatt hours; what are the assumptions behind such cost projections; and if he will publish details of any recent cost evaluations which are publicly available.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Estimates of fast reactor costs are in the energy technology support unit report ETSU-R-43, published in 1987, which is in the Library of the House.

Sellafield (Chimney)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about what plans are in hand, and the proposed time scale, for pulling down the chimney at Sellafield which was involved in the 1957 fire.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is the responsibility of British Nuclear Fuels plc. Work on the chimneys forms part of the programme of work being undertaken jointly by BNFL and the United Kingdom Atomic Energy authority which was announced by the chairman of the UKAEA on 5 October 1987. A copy of his statement has been placed in the Library.

Windscale (AGR)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the progress, time scale, and costs, for the decommissioning of the 100 MW advanced gas-cooled reactor at Windscale.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Decommissioning began in 1982 and has progressed according to a programme aimed at achieving a green field site by 1996. About £20 million has been spent or committed to date and a further £30 million (at current costs) is estimated to be required for completion (excluding ultimate disposal of intermediate level waste). The Department is discussing with the UKAEA the implications for the programme of CEGB's decision to withdraw its funding.

Plutonium

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy how much plutonium produced at Calder and Chapelcross reactors has been sent for use in the United States of America for each year since 1979.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 11 March 1988 at column 362.

Power Stations (Reject Heat)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what information he has on the use being made of reject heat from power stations for commercial fish farming or horticulture at (a) coastal power stations and (b) inland power stations; what information he has to how many such farms pay a 10 per cent. royalty charge on turnover to the Central Electricity Generating Board; and what increase the Central Electricity Generating Board have received in such royalty payments.

Mr. Michael Spicer: This is a commercial matter for the Central Electricity Generating Board, and I have asked the chairman to write to my hon. Friend.

Public Sector Companies (Foreign Shareholding)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will list all the public sector United Kingdom companies in which Transnuklear of Hanau, Federal Republic of Germany, has a corporate share involvement; and if he will set out the percentage share involvement by Transnuklear;

(2) if he will list all the public section United Kingdom companies in which NUKEM Gmbh of Hanau, Federal Republic of Germany, has a corporate shareholding and set out the percentage share involvement by NUKEM.

Mr. Michael Spicer [pursuant to his reply, 6 May 1988, c. 652.]: I understand that neither Transnuklear nor Nukem Gmbh has any shareholding in any United Kingdom public sector company.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Western European Union

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, at the next Council of Ministers of the Western European Union, he will take steps to require the administration of the Union to prepare a study of the factors to be taken into account in assessing the burden-sharing incumbent upon each member of the alliance for ensuring joint security, and to communicate this study to the assembly in Paris.

Mr. Mellor: The issue of burden-sharing is already under discussion within the WEU. Whether any report that is produced is submitted to the Assembly is a matter which will require the unanimous agreement of WEU member states. However, we will bear the Assembly's interest in burden-sharing very much in mind.

Mr. Hill: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in the negotiations on the accession of Portugal and Spain to the modified Brussels treaty and on their effective participation in the Western European Security system.

Mr. Mellor: Discussions with both Spain and Portugal on their possible accession to the WEU will open in The Hague on 26 May. Good progress has already been made in the discussions between Spain and NATO on a Spanish military contribution to the common defence.

Paraguay

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Paraguayan Government regarding the arrest of the opposition leader Domingo Laino on 12 May; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: On 12 May Her Majesty's ambassador expressed our concern about the arrest of Sr Laino and several colleagues to the Paraguayan authorities. Sr Laino was released on 14 May.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Superbadge Limited

Mr. Boyes: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what grants have been made to Superbadge Ltd., Crowther industrial estate, Washington, Tyne and Wear, by his Department.

Mr. Atkins: An offer of £383,000 regional selective assistance (comprising project grant and training grant) was made to Superbadge Ltd. in 1985. In addition, £156,000 revised regional development grant has been paid.

Note: The figure for regional selective assistance relates to details of offers published in British Business. The figure for regional development grant relates to details of payments published in British Business.

Mobile Radio Licence

Ms. Walley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why the cost of a private mobile radio licence has been increased to £120 for 1988.

Mr. Butcher: The charging band for one to five mobile stations has been merged with the six to 10 mobile stations band (fee £120) to reflect the irreducible cost of frequency assignments for small systems. Previously licensees with six to 10 mobiles were effectively subsidising those with one to five mobile stations.

Inner Cities (Disabled People)

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what co-ordinating machinery he intends to establish to ensure that full account of the needs of disabled people is taken in all plans concerning the revitalisation of the inner cities;

(2) how he plans to ensure full access provision for disabled people in the revitalisation of the inner cities when new buildings are erected and existing buildings refurbished;

(3) which disability organisations have made representations concerning his plans for revitalisation of the inner cities; and what replies he has sent.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have received representations from the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation (RADAR) concerning plans for inner city regeneration. stressing the need for inner city development to take account of the needs of the disabled and the important contribution they can make. RADAR has set out its views in a paper "Disabled People and the Inner Cities" which has been circulated to Departments' regional offices and the Government's city action teams and inner city task forces which are responsible for supporting initiatives and projects at local level. The Government take account of the needs of the disabled in planning development projects in which they have an interest and several Departments, including the Departments of the Environment, of Health and Social Security and of Transport are in regular touch with disability organisations. Their needs are also reflected in the provisions on access for disabled people contained in building regulations. I have no plans to set up separate co-ordinating machinery.

British Steel Corporation

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what special arrangements will be made to enable the employees of the British Steel Corporation to receive shares in the forthcoming privatisation of the British Steel Corporation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The Government welcome the involvement of employees through employee share arrangements in buying shares in privatised companies at the time of flotation. We believe that this has been of considerable benefit both to the employees and the companies concerned. It is our intention therefore to make available the following special arrangements, for United Kingdom employees of the British Steel Corporation and its wholly owned subsidiaries:

(i) employees will each be offered £70 worth of free shares plus a further £2 of shares for every year of service with the corporation. An employee with 15 years' service could therefore be eligible to receive, free of charge, £100 worth of shares;

(ii) employees will also be offered 2 free shares for each one bought at the full share price on a matching basis, up to a maximum value in free shares of £330. An employee buying £165 worth of shares would thus receive shares worth in total £495;

(iii) employees will be able to buy shares, up to a maximum value of £2,200, at a discount of 10 per cent. on the full share price;

(iv) employees and BSC pensioners applying for shares at the full share price, will be treated on a priority basis over the general public, up to a limit of £10,000 worth of shares per individual.

The free and matching shares will be available to United Kingdom employees who satisfy certain minimum qualification periods on length of employment and hours worked per week. The discount and priority shares will be available to all United Kingdom employees. All these arrangements will be subject to an overall limit of 10 per cent. of the shares on offer in the flotation. The exact number of shares will be determined once the share price is decided.

Mr. Page: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements will be made in respect of a special share for the privatisation of British Steel.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The British Steel Bill currently before Parliament makes provision for the assets and liabilities of the British Steel Corporation to be transferred to a successor company. It is the Government's intention that the articles of that successor company should contain a provision which would restrict individual shareholdings in the company to a maximum of 15 per cent. of the equity. This provision would be protected by a "special share" in the company to be held by the Government. The arrangement would thus ensure that the successor company could not be taken over without the agreement of the Government as special shareholder.

It is the Government's intention that these arrangements would last for five years from the date of privatisation. The special shareholder would have no other rights in respect of other provisions in the articles or in respect of voting.

Commodity Prices

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing, for each year from 1970, as an index, with 1970 = 100, average real prices for the following commodities (a) cotton, (b) metal, (c) wool, (d) coffee and (e) all non-food agricultural products.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 16 May 1988]: There is no unique deflator to convert commodity prices to real terms. The available information is in the table, based on prices in US dollars.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Post-16 Provision

10. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss future arrangements for post-16 provision; and if he will make a statement.

38. Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss future arrangements for post-16 provision; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has no plans at present to meet the Association of Metropolitan Authorities to discuss post-16 provision. However, he is always willing to receive representations from the association on that or any other issue.

School Meals

15. Mr. Ashton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children were in receipt of free school meals in 1987.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1987, the latest date for which data are available, some 1,100,000 pupils, or 17·7 per cent. of those in attendance at maintained schools in England, received free shool meals.

16. Mr. Boyes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of children taking school meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Battle: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has on the number of children taking school meals; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1987, the latest date for which data are available, some 3,091,000 pupils, or 49·8 per cent. of those in attendance at maintained schools in England, took school meals.

Research

17. Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what changes there have been in the balance of research supported by his Department and by other Departments in recent years.

Mr. Jackson: Expenditure on research by the Department, mainly through the research councils and the University Grants Committee, in the current financial year is estimated at about 28·5 per cent. of total expenditure on research by all Government Departments. In 1979-80, it was about 27 per cent. There has therefore been a small increase.

Education Reform Bill

18. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about those aspects of the Education Reform Bill which deal with higher education.

Mr. Jackson: Many representations have been received. Copies of those from organisations in response to the various consultative documents are in the Library.

20. Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is in a position to provide more detail of the proposed methods of testing under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

51. Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he is now in a position to provide more detail of the proposed method of testing under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Not yet.

44. Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the effect the Education Reform Bill will have on grammar schools with regard to curriculum and enrolment.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend has received a number of representations and queries from grammar schools concerning the effects of the Education Reform Bill. The national curriculum proposals will allow all schools the flexibility to meet the particular needs of their pupils, including the most able. The proposals on open enrolment will not affect the nature of the intake to grammar schools, as the relief safeguarding the selective character of such schools under the Education Act 1980 will remain in force.

Research Funding

19. Mr. Maxton: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met the president of the Royal Society to discuss research funding.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend has not had an official meeting with the president of the Royal Society to discuss research funding. I have. We have, of course, taken note of the points made by Sir George Porter in his recent Richard Dimbleby lecture on science.

Medical Research Council

21. Mr. Goodlad: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the Medical Research Council.

Mr. Jackson: I last met the council on 5 February 1988, and am planning to visit the MRC's national institute for medical research on 30 June. My right hon. Friend is hoping to meet representatives of the MRC before the summer recess.

University of Wales

22. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he last met representatives of the governing bodies of the university of Wales; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Jackson: On 29 January 1987, when matters relating to the funding of the university were discussed.

Religious Education

23. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what comparative study he has made of the suitability of the agreed syallabus obtaining in various local education authority areas, in the light of public concern at the ignorance among young people of the Bible and Christianity; what report he has received of the extent to which the statutory collective act of worship is observed or neglected; and if he will institute an appropriate inquiry into the current state of religious education.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend does not have details of all current locally agreed syllabuses; but he is not persuaded on the evidence available to him that any are unsuitable, and the evidence suggests that the vast majority give Christianity a central place. There is evidence that some schools fail to provide collective worship as required by the present law. Where such matters are brought to my right hon. Friend's attention by complaint or otherwise, they are followed up by the Department; in 1987 seven complaints were received. The Education Reform Bill contains a number of measures to strengthen the position of religious education in the schools curriculum, and to update the law on collective worship as recommended by the Education, Science and Arts Select Committee. My right hon. Friend has no plans to institute any inquiry.

53. Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the future of religious education in England and Wales.

Mrs. Rumbold: A large number of letters have been received, from hon. Members and others. These expressed concern at the exclusion of religious education from the national curriculum, and about a lack of Christian content in the subject. The Education Reform Bill has been amended in another place to strengthen the position of religious education in schools; the Christian content of religious education will be considered further in the other place at a later stage of the Bill.

Advisory Board for the Research Councils

24. Dr. Bray: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he proposes next to meet the Advisory Board for the Research Councils.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I met the advisory board on 25 November 1987, and we have met its chairman on a number of occasions since. Further meetings will be arranged as and when necessary.

Special Schools (Transport)

25. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to ensure that pupils of special schools are not prevented from attending school by industrial action affecting special school transport in London.

Mr. Dunn: The strike action by a small number of the Inner London education authority's managerial staff, which affected the school meals and transport services of schools, including special schools, between 21 April and 26 April, has been called off. Negotiations with the National Association of Local Government Officers have resumed on the Inner London education authority's plan to improve the efficiency of its fleet transport service.

Pupils (Attendance Levels)

26. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he has received from education authorities about the attendance levels of pupils aged 15 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: Local education authorities are not required to submit information about school attendance levels to my right hon. Friend. In consequence, there are no centrally-held statistics on the attendance rates of pupils aged 15 years.

Her Majesty's Inspector is this year undertaking specific exercises to examine good practice in fostering high rates of attendance. The Department intends to draw on Her Majesty's Inspector's findings for a circular which will follow up circular 2/86 on school attendance and education welfare services.

Village Schools

27. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what further steps he is taking to safeguard the future of village schools.

Mr. Dunn: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply which I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Cornwall, South-East (Mr. Hicks).

Church of England Secondary Education

28. Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about his policy towards the role of Church of England secondary education in relation to local education authority secondary education.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend values the work done by the Church of England schools within the maintained sector in co-operation with local education authorities.

Rating Reform

29. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any plans to meet representatives of the National Union of Students to discuss the implementation of the proposed community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Halifax (Mrs. Mahon).

Further Education

30. Mr. Henderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to improve the staying-on rate in education after the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

39. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to improve the staying-on rate in education after the age of 16 years; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Members to my reply to the hon. Members for Barnsley, West and Penistone (Mr. McKay) and for Wansbeck (Mr. Thompson) on 19 April 1988 at columns 391-92.

Inner London

31. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received about the future of education in inner London; and if he will make a statement.

41. Mrs. Rosie Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the effect of transferring statutory education in inner London from the Inner London education authority to inner London boroughs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: I refer the hon. Members to the reply given by my right hon. Friend earlier this afternoon to the hon. Member for Hackney, South and Shoreditch (Mr. Sedgemore).

55. Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the draft guidance to London boroughs on the transfer of education services following the abolition of the Inner London education authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The draft guidance to boroughs was published on 26 April. We await the considered views of those bodies who have received copies.

Pupils (Tests)

32. Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many representations he has received opposing his proposals for the compulsory testing of pupils from (a) pupils, (b) parents and (c) teachers.

37. Mr. Sackville: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received from members of the teaching profession about assessment and testing under the provisions of the Education Reform Bill.

Mrs. Rumbold: We have received some 9,000 representations from individuals and organisations mentioning some aspect of national assessment and testing. Many of these do not indicate their background or their particular views on the Government's proposals. About half of a small sample of responses analysed appear to be from parents, a quarter from teachers, and a negligible proportion from pupils.

English Teaching

33. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he intends to take in the light of responses received on the proposals in the Kingman report on the teaching of English.

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any further proposals to improve the teaching of English grammar in the light of responses to the Kingman report.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friends to the reply I gave to my hon. Friends the Members for Beaconsfield (Mr. Smith) and Ealing, North (Mr. Greenway) earlier today.

Grants and Awards (Recipients)

34. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what statistical record he keeps of subsequent career moves by recipients of research council grants and awards.

Mr. Jackson: None centrally. The research councils collect data about the first employment destinations of their award holders.

Higher Education

35. Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on his Department's policy towards encouraging wider access to higher education.

Mr. Jackson: We have received many such representations. The Government remain committed to the widening of access to higher education as set out in "Higher Education: Meeting the Challenge" (Cm. 114).

National Curriculum

36. Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about whether the national curriculum is designed with sufficient flexibility to ensure adequate preparation for pupils in the 14 to 16 years age range; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: A number of replies to our consultation document stressed the need for flexibility for this age group. The proposals in the Education Reform Bill will secure this flexibility in a number of ways: by enabling the national curriculum in those years to be offered in 70 per cent. of the time available; by providing for attainment targets and programmes of study or guidelines for foundation subjects which can be met in a variety of ways, and by giving the Secretary of State the power to make regulations modifying or disapplying elements of the national curriculum pupils for whom this is appropriate.

University Funding

40. Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has received any representations about the future funding of universities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We have received many such representations which have helped to shape the university funding provisions in the Education Reform Bill.

Teacher Morale

42. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he has any proposals to improve teacher morale, following the report of the interim advisory committee; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: My right hon. Friend announced on 19 April that he proposed to accept the recommendations on pay rates in the report of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay and conditions. He is now considering the representations that have been made to him about the report.

Assessment and Testing

43. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish the supplementary report of the task group on assessment and testing; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's reply to the hon. Member for Durham, North-West (Ms. Armstrong) on 19 April at columns 665-66.

Teachers' Pay

45. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what was the total salary bill incurred in the payment of teachers in England and Wales in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mrs. Rumbold: Based on the returns of expenditure made to the Department of the Environment by local authorities the overall expenditure on the salaries of teachers in nursery, primary, secondary and special schools in England in the financial year 1986-87, the latest year for which actual figures are available, was £5,764 million. The figure includes the employers' contributions towards national insurance and superannuation but excludes Crombie and premature retirement compensation payments.

Information relating to Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Grant-maintained Schools

46. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received about the establishment of grant-maintained schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has now received just over 1,000 letters about his proposals for grant-maintained schools, together with a variety of less formal representations. A number of these expressed interest in acquiring grant-maintained status for a particular school.

Nursery Education

47. Mr. Ian Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest percentage of children in nursery education in England and Wales; and if Her Majesty's Government have any plans to offer nursery education to all children.

Mr. Dunn: In January 1987, the latest date for which figures are available, 23 per cent. of three to four-year-old children in England were in nursery schools and nursery classes. Information about Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. As to the remainder of my hon. Friend's question, I refer him to my reply to the hon. Member for City of Durham (Mr. Steinberg) on 19 January at column 805.

Harrow (In-service Education)

48. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he has reached a conclusion on possible additional Government assistance, following the report of Her Majesty's inspectors, for the provision of in-service education in the London borough of Harrow.

Mrs. Rumbold: The most recent Her Majesty's inspectorate report that refers to in-service training in the London borough of Harrow is concerned with business education in the borough and was based on a survey carried out in autumn 1986. Since then the Government have introduced the local education authority training grant scheme which supports expenditure by local education authorities on in-service training. In 1988-89 grant will be available to support £207 million of expenditure, including £757,000 of expenditure by the London borough of Harrow.

Academic Freedom

49. Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to meet the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals to discuss the safeguarding of academic freedom; and if he will make a statement.

59. Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he next expects to meet the Committee of University Vice-Chancellors and Principals to discuss academic freedom.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether he intends to meet the Committee of Vice-Chancellors and Principals to discuss the safeguarding of academic freedom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend and I have met the vice chancellors to discuss their two main concerns about academic freedom. The first, that academic freedom in higher education institutions should not be at risk from interference by the Government, has been met by Government amendments to clauses 115 to 117 of the Education Reform Bill in a way that has been welcomed. Their other concern is that individual academics should not be victimised by other academics on account of their views. The Bill contains very substantial safeguards on this including a requirement for the commissioners to establish a proper appeals procedure in cases of dismissal and, by removing the exclusive jurisdiction of the visitor, provides access to the courts for actions concerning wrongful dismissal. Those will be strengthened by the amendment we intend to table to the Bill requiring the commissioners to establish grievance procedures. Even so, the Government are willing to consider what further appropriate protection might be provided and discussions to that end are continuing with the vice chancellors.

Science Curriculum Working Group

50. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish a further report of the science curriculum working group; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: The science curriculum working group has been asked to submit its recommendations for attainment targets and programmes of study in a final report to be submitted to my right hon. Friend by 30 June 1988. I envisage that this report will be published and that, together with any comments by my right hon. Friend, it will form the basis for consultation through the National Curriculum Council as regards England.

Research Expenditure

52. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the latest estimate he has of academic and academically related research expenditure in the United Kingdom as a percentage of gross domestic product and the comparable figures in France and Germany.

Mr. Jackson: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill (Mr. Davis) on 15 March 1988 at column 537.

City Technology Colleges

54. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a further statement on the progress of city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Gedling (Mr. Mitchell) on 15 March at column 530.

Drug Abuse and Alcohol Consumption

56. Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what assessment he has made of the extent to which increased truancy and problems of discipline among secondary pupils are attributable to drug abuse and alcohol consumption; and what measures his Department is taking, and plans to take, to counter such activity among school children.

Mr. Dunn: The information available to us from Her Majesty's Inspectorate's reports, and from research, has not suggested that either of these matters is a major factor in truancy or indiscipline. We shall be looking to the committee of inquiry into discipline in schools to recommend action to promote good discipline.

Initiatives taken by the Department to counter drug abuse and alcohol consumption include funding for the appointment of drugs education co-ordinators in each local education authority in England at a cost of £6·7 million over three years; the allocation of £2 million per year since 1987 for teacher training in drug related problems; research funding; the funding of pamphlets and other materials; and encouragement to schools to promote health education as a necessary element in both the primary and secondary school curriculum.

GCSE

57. Mr. Anthony Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that employers understand the changes inherent in the new GCSE and their implications for educational standards.

Mrs. Rumbold: My Department has conducted a major campaign over the last year to inform employers about GCSE and the contribution the new examination will make to the Government's policies for raising educational standards.

60. Mr. Madel: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the arrangements that have been made for the marking of GCSE papers this summer.

Mrs. Rumbold: The GCSE examining groups are responsible for marking GCSE examination papers and for awarding GCSE grades in a manner consistent with the GCSE national criteria. The Secondary Examinations Council and Her Majesty's Inspectorate will be attending a selection of the group's meetings concerned with the awarding of GCSE grades.

Teachers (Pay and Conditions)

58. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects the European Community survey on pay and conditions for teachers in the European Community countries to be published.

Mrs. Rumbold: We understand that the European Commission will shortly be distributing copies of this survey to HMSO bookshops.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what representations he has received on the report of the interim advisory committee on teachers' pay and conditions; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Rumbold: I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend gave earlier today to the hon. Member for Hemsworth (Mr. Buckley).

Maintenance Awards

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what would be the cost, for 1988-89, of deeming all students as independent, at the age of 21 years instead of 25 years, for the purpose of calculating maintenance awards.

Mr. Jackson: Approximately £90 million, on the basis of the Government's latest projections of student numbers and assuming that the age distribution remains broadly unchanged.

Science Base (Strategy)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to reply to the advisory board for the research councils' report to him on strategy for the science base.

Mr. Jackson: My right hon. Friend expects to make a considered statement later this year on the Government's policy objectives for the science base and the steps we will be taking to achieve them, taking account of the ABRC's recommendations and the comments on these from the higher education and scientific communities.

Universities and Polytechnics (Funding)

Mr. Ernie Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what estimate he has made of future funding of research in universities and polytechnics by private sources; and how this affects his plans for financial support from public sources.

Mr. Jackson: We have encouraged higher education institutions to develop their externally funded research and consultancy, and welcome the rapid increase that has taken place. However, in keeping with our assurance that this is institutions' private business, we have no estimate for future growth and we take no account of this income in our public expenditure planning.

SCOTLAND

Conservative Party Committee on Industry

Mr. Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the Scottish Conservative party committee on industry, chaired by Sir James Gulliver, has met within his Department; and on whose authority.

Mr. Lang: The Scottish Conservative party committee chaired by Sir James Gulliver has never met within the Scottish Office.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken, in relation to the community charge and the first data protection principle, to satisfy himself that his Department follows the advice from the Data Protection Registrar in his guideline number 4, paragraph 1.4; and what steps are to be taken by his Department to adhere to that advice.

Mr. Lang: Compliance with the Data Protection Act 1984 and the data protection principles is a matter for individual community charges registration officers and local authorities.

Cervical Tests

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to have information on the waiting time for cervical test results in each laboratory in every health board in Scotland; and if the information will be made public.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Health boards are being consulted with a view to the production of these statistics for each laboratory on a quarterly basis. Arrangements will be made to publish the information as quickly as practicable after its receipt.

Pre-Five Services

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) whether he has considered multi-disciplinary training for those employed in the care of under-fives; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he has any plans to improve staffing levels, conditions of services, and career prospects for staff in pre-five services.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Staffing levels in pre-fives services and the conditions of service, career prospects and training of staff who work in them are matters for regional and islands councils to decide.

Under-Fives (Health)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to encourage good health habits in the under-fives.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The primary responsibility for developing healthy habits in young children rests with their parents. We encourage parents to have their infant children immunised against childhood infectious diseases and health education information is directed towards parents on this and other general aspects of child health. All health professionals, doctors, nurses and health visitors play an important part in delivering health messages to parents.

Ante-Natal Clinics

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to assist mothers who have difficulties in attending ante-natal clinics.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Assistance with travel costs is already available to mothers attending ante-natal clinics at a maternity unit administered by a hospital if their income is inadequate.

Child Development

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has on recent research into the value of involving parents in their child's development, both at home and in the nursery setting; and if he has any policy proposals in response to these.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: It is not clear what recent research the hon. Member has in mind. If she can be more specific I shall be happy to respond.

Childminding

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will take steps to improve the quality of childminding services by practical advice, support and training to childminders.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Under the Nurseries and Child-minders Regulation Act 1948 local authorities are responsible for the registration of childminders, in order to ensure certain standards of provision. My right hon. and learned Friend has for a number of years made grants under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 to the National Child Minding Association, to help improve the quality and training of childminders and the service it provides. For 1988-89 he has offered the association substantial additional grant towards the funding of a development officer post for Scotland.

Toy Libraries

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make funds available for toy libraries in areas of priority treatment.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: In addition to the assistance which he provides towards local authority expenditure on social work through rate support grant, my right hon. and learned Friend provides grants under section 10 of the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 to the voluntary organisation Playmatters which promotes toy libraries. Under the urban programme projects in eligible areas may qualify for assistance.

Health Boards (Finance)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the financial position of each Scottish health board as of 31 March.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Precise information on the level of spending by health boards in 1987-88 against their approved cash limits will not be available centrally until boards submit copies of their statutory accounts at the beginning of July.

Health Service (Performance-related Pay)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the amount of performance-related pay awarded to each general manager and unit general manager in the Scottish Health Service in 1987-88.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The payments made to individual managers are confidential between him and their employing authority.

Deaf Children

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will introduce legislation requiring local health authorities to supply information about voluntary organisations which can give help and support to deaf children and their parents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I do not consider that such legislation is required, since Scottish local authorities responsible for social work services are already under a statutory duty to provide disabled people with such information on services provided by themselves or other organisations as is in their possession.

Severe Mental Handicap

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he proposes to take steps to alter the definition of severe mental handicap in respect of the community charge, in the light of the review of the term taking place in England and Wales.

Mr. Lang: The review which is currently taking place is being undertaken on a Great Britain basis. Any change in the definition of severe mental handicap for the purposes of exemption from the personal community charge would apply to England and Wales and Scotland.

Autistic Children

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what provisions are being made in the national curriculum to ensure that the special needs of autistic children will be adequately met.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 12 May 1988]: The Government's policies for curriculum and assessment will take into account the educational requirements of children identified and recorded as having special educational needs.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farms (Sellafield)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what radiation and other checks are carried out on the produce of the tenant farms next to, and in the vicinity of the Sellafield nuclear power plant; and to what extent the final destination of the produce is monitored.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food operates a programme of regular routine monitoring around all of the major licensed nuclear sites in England and Wales. As part of this terrestrial radioactivity monitoring programme, milk, crop and animal samples are regularly taken from the vicinity of the Sellafield site. Monitoring of individual dietary intakes is undertaken both locally and in other parts of the country to confirm that no dietary pathways are being overlooked.

In addition to the Ministry's monitoring programme, checks are also undertaken by the National Radiological Protection Board, the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology, the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority and by British Nuclear Fuels plc, the plant operators.

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) why the European Economic Community Commission has introduced restrictions on the import of apples; whether he was consulted on these restrictions; and what assessment he has made of the implications of these restrictions for the general agreement on tariffs and trade;

(2) what estimate he has made of the impact on apple prices and consumer choice of the restrictions placed by the European Economic Community Commission on further imports;

(3) if the European Economic Community will offer compensation to the owners of apples which were in transit to Europe on the day the European Economic Community imposed restrictions on imports; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 16 May 1988]: The EC Commission has acted under article 29(2) of regulation 1035/72 on the common organisation of the market in fruit and vegetables which allows it to act on its own initiative if it considers that imports from third countries cause or threaten to cause serious disturbance on the Community market. The Commission is not obliged to consult member states on such matters and did not do so, on the ground that urgent action was necessary. The compatibility of these restrictions with the GATT will be investigated within the framework of that organisation by a GATT panel and I would not wish to speculate on the outcome. Our view is that the overall impact of these restrictions on apple prices and consumer choice will be limited. Even with these restrictions, imports from third countries are likely to be at the same or somewhat higher levels this year than last. However, I am concerned that member states did not have an opportunity to weigh possible effects on trade and markets in advance of the decision, and our views on this have been made clear in the Community. I appreciate the problems faced by the traders who bought apples in good faith but have not been able to obtain licences as a result of the ban, and representations have been made to the Commission on this specific point. However, I do not think that this is an appropriate case for compensation from United Kingdom funds.

THE ARTS

Science Museum

61. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has received any representations about the level of his Department's funding for the science museum; and if he will make a statement.

62. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he has received any representations about the level of his Department's funding for the science museum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: I have received no such representations.

Last December I announced the grant-in-aid allocations for the next three years for the Science museum and the other national museums and galleries that I sponsor. The Science museum's grant in aid for running costs and purchase grant is £11·422 million in the present financial year. Comparing like with like, this is an increase in real terms of some 26 per cent. since 1979-80.

TRANSPORT

Vehicles (Fuel Consumption)

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the average fuel consumption for automobiles in the United Kingdom in 1973, 1976, 1979, 1982, 1985 and 1988; what are the fuel consumpton projects for 1990, 1995 and the year 2000; whether he has any proposals to set fuel consumption targets for automobile and other vehicles; and whether he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy for energy efficiency in the transport sector.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The information is as follows:

Registered average fuel consumption of new cars sold

	Miles per gallon
1979	31·38
1982	34·66
1985	37·53
[1]1987	38·1

[1] The latest year available.

Data for earlier years is not available. Nor are detailed projections.

The Department considers that technology advances will make possible a further 50 per cent. improvement in cars generally by 2010. There are no proposals to set fuel consumption targets.

The Government believe that energy efficiency in the transport sector is best promoted by allowing the free operation of market forces. We aim to remove obstacles which might prevent this from happening.

The Department of Transport and the Department of Energy promote the benefits of cost-effective energy management in the area of commercial transport, including guidance to consumers.

Seat Belts (Coaches)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce the results of his Department's investigation into the possibility of extending the requirements to install safety belts on seats most at risk in existing motor coaches.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There is conflicting technical advice from the Consumers' Association, and the Bus and Coach Council. We have asked the two organsations to consider the matter jointly and to produce a paper for the Department.

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the cost of requiring passenger seat belts to be fitted to all new motor coaches.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The coach manufacturers put the cost of fitting two-point seat belts to all the seats on a 57-seat coach at approximately £1,000 to £1,500.

Coaches (Shatterproof Glass)

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimates he has made of the cost of requiring shatterproof glass to be fitted in all new motor coaches.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The majority of new coaches are fitted with laminated glass windscreens with the remainder of the glazing being of toughened glass. Toughened glass may shatter on impact. It does not break into dangerous particles.

The additional cost of laminated glass for all the glazing requirements would be in the range £500 to £600 for a single deck coach and around £1,200 for a double deck coach.

Coach Safety

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he next intends to meet the Bus and Coach Council to discuss improvements in coach safety.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: In June.

Vehicle Excise Duty

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will estimate the amount of extra revenue that would be received in the current financial year if there were no evasion of vehicle excise duty.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The amount of revenue lost from VED evasion in the United Kingdom during the 1987-88 financial year is estimated to be £108 million. No estimates for 1988-89 are yet available.

Heathrow Airport (Noise)

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to announce the end of the special exemption allowing noisy jets to fly into Heathrow airport; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There has been no "special exemption". The criteria for granting exemptions remain as set out in my answer on 19 February at columns 748-50. Since then a further 17 applications have been refused and the following exemptions (which do not relate to a specific airport) granted:

Country	Operator	Aircraft type and period	Reasons
Sudan	Sudan Airways	Three B707 1 April 1988 to 18 May 1988	Extension to previous exemption
Uganda	Uganda Airlines	One B707 10 March 1988 (one flight)	DC10 in maintenance
United States of America	Pincervale Ltd	One GII 21 March 1988 to 30 August 1988	Limited business use. Compliant aircraft on order
Rumania	TAROM	One IL62 27 March 1988 (one flight)	Hardship to passengers
Zambia	Zambia Airways	One B707 27 to 28 March 1988 (2 flights)	DC10 out of service
Lebanon	Middle East Airlines	One B707 31 March 1988 to 1 April 1988 (one flight)	Hardship to passengers
Kenya	Kenya Airways	One B707 2 and 7 April 1988 (two flights)	Hardship to passengers
Lebanon	Middle East Airlines	One B707 9 April 1988 (one flight)	Compliant aircraft not available due to technical problems
United States of America	Advance Machine Company	One GII 15 to 24 April 1988 (three flights)	Limited business use. Compliant aircraft on order

Country	Operator	Aircraft type and period	Reasons
Lebanon	Middle East Airlines	One B707 1 May 1988 (one flight)	Compliant aircraft not available due to technical problems
Kenya	Kenya Airways	One B707 6 May 1988 (two flights)	Compliant aircraft not available due to technical problems
United States of America	Crown Controls Corporation	One GII 11 to 14 May 1988 (one flight)	Hushkit delay
Lebanon	Middle East Airlines	One B707 14 to 15 May 1988 (one flight)	Compliant aircraft not available due to technical problems
United States of America	Airwaves Corporation	One GII 15 to 19 May 1988 (one flight)	Hushkit delay
United States of America	Union Pacific Corporation	One GII 14 to 20 May 1988 (three flights)	Compliant aircraft on order

A further 23 maintenance flights have also been exempted.

British Rail (Diesels)

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects to be able to announce his decision on British Rail's proposal to order 100 class 60 diesel locomotives for its freight sector; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: I have today given approval to British Rail for the purchase of 100 class 60 freight locomotives at a cost of some £120 million. This demonstrates again the Government's willingness to approve worthwhile investment in the railways.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what steps he has taken to ensure that adequate seismic monitoring has been conducted to establish the nature and extent of possible subterranean disturbances which could affect the structure of the Channel tunnel; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received from Dr. Richard Haworth, chief geophysicist of the geophysical survey on geological structures, when considering the Channel tunnel; what consideration was given to them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell [holding answer 16 May 1988]: Dr. Howarth approached my Department in December 1985, asking whether there had been any investigation into the susceptibility of the Channel tunnel fixed link to earth tremors, and offering the services of the British Geological Survey to investigate the seismic risk associated with the Link and to monitor seismicity. He was told of the advice from the British Geological Survey prior to the 1975 Channel tunnel project, the way this information had been passed to the Channel Tunnel Group, and the coverage of seismic risks in the group's proposal.

It is for Eurotunnel to assemble and assess data, including data on earthquakes and the geophysical features of the region, on which to base the design of the Channel tunnel, its ancillary infrastructure and its equipment. The Channel Tunnel Safety Authority is considering outline design proposals from Eurotunnel for the entire project and satisfying itself that all risks and safety aspects have been properly taken into account, including earthquakes. All these design proposals are being scrutinised and commented on by the independent maitre d'oeuvre. The authority has been considering commissioning independent specialist advice on seismic aspects of Eurotunnel's proposals, but not considering commissioning seismic monitoring.

Lorries (Weight)

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will state the estimated cost of strengthening bridges and widening roads were the maximum weight of lorries increased to (a) to 40 tonnes and (b) 44 tonnes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley [holding answer 13 May 1988]: The bridge census and sample survey report of March last year estimated that it would cost about £750 million to strengthen road bridges to meet the standards of the Department's bridge assessment code, which covers 40 and 44-tonne vehicles with 10·5 tonne drive axles.

Strengthening to meet the higher EC standard, for a 40-tonne vehicle with 11·5 tonne drive axle, would increase this cost a little. No additional expenditure should be needed to widen roads solely for heavier lorries.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Spending Power (Statistics)

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables similar to the tax benefit model table showing the net weekly spending power for each of (a) a single person, (b) a married couple with no children, (c) a couple with a child aged 11 years, (d) a couple with two children aged eight and 11 years, (e) a couple with three children aged, eight, 11 and 15 years, (f) a couple with four children aged three, eight, 11 and 15 years with weekly earnings of (i) £60, (ii) £70, (iii) £80, (iv) £90, (v) £100, (vi) £110, (vii) £120, (viii) £130, (ix) £140, (x) £150, (xi) £160, (xii) £170, and (xiii) £180 under the new system implemented in April, together with net weekly spending power in the first weeks of unemployment when the individuals concerned are classified as long-term unemployed.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is provided in the tables. It should be noted that the results are hypothetical in two senses. First, the results are based on average local authority housing charges and do not reflect the wide variety of rents and domestic rates that people actually pay. Second, average housing charges have been uprated to 1988-89 using assumptions set out in "Impact of the Reformed Structure of Income Related Benefits," October 1987. Income tax has been assessed on a post-Budget basis.

Pensioners (Canada)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the reason why British pensioners living in Canada receive no pension uprating;

(2) if he has approached the Canadian Government recently to ascertain if it is prepared to enter into a social security agreement with Britain to provide for the future payment of pension increases to British pensioners living there.

Mr. Scott: The last occasion on which the United Kingdom Government asked the Canadian Government if they would be prepared to enter into a social security agreement with Britain to include the future payment of pension increases to British pensioners living in Canada was in 1972. At that time the Canadian Government were unable to enter into negotiations. Since then informal discussions have taken place between officials from time to time. However, the substantial costs involved have prevented the United Kingdom from providing for the payment of pension increases.

Retail Prices Index (Error)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many pensioners in (a) Scotland and (b) the United Kingdom as a whole lost financially as a result of the Government's recent error in calculating the retail prices index.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that 10,000 pensioners in Scotland and 130,000 in Great Britain were undercompensated for the error in the retail prices index as a result of having more than one benefit paid on a single order book. Of nearly 10 million pensioners, the vast majority were fully compensated for the error.

Birth Statistics

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate, on the basis of the latest figures available, the average cost to public funds of a normal birth at (a) hospital and (b) home.

Mrs. Currie: The estimated gross current health and personal social services expenditure per birth in 1985-86 was around £1,220. Separate costs for a normal birth at (a) home and (b) hospital are not available although we expect information about the average costs for all hospital births and home births will become available in 1989.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the cost to his Department of increased payments of housing beneft arising from the deregulation of rents under the Housing (Scotland) Bill; and what calculations he has made concerning the application of new criteria restricting benefit payments to people who live in unnecessarily large or unnecessarily expensive accommodation.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to make such estimates with any degree of precision, especially as the detailed arrangements are still under consideration.

Telephone Exchange for the Deaf

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to assist the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, over and above sums guaranteed under the concerned technology scheme, with the funding needed to operate and develop the telephone exchange for the deaf on a long-term basis.

Mr. Scott: It was made clear to the Royal National Institute for the Deaf, when awarding a grant for 1987-88 and 1988-89 relating to the telephone exchange for the deaf, that this was for two years only and that when the grant expired it would be for the institute to find alternative sources of funding.

Married Couples (Pension)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) 22 April, Official Report, column 602, if he will give the figure for the married couple's pension on the same basis.

Mr. Scott: If the basic retirement pension had been increased in line with the overall increase in earnings between November 1978 and September 1987, the end of the period measured for the April 1988 uprating, the level of pension in April 1988 would be £75·35 for a couple.

Pensions (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many additional pensioners will become eligible for housing benefit as a result of the increase in the capital limit to £8,000.

Mr. Portillo: An estimated 100,000 people, mostly pensioners, will be brought back within the scope of housing benefit as a result of increasing the capital cut-off point to £8,000.

Sheep (Radiation)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services on how many occasions following the Chernobyl accident of April 1986, National Health Service whole body monitors were used to monitor the level of radiation in dead sheep; and at what hospitals this took place.

Mrs. Currie: I am advised that the Department is unaware of any such use of NHS whole-body monitors.

Electorate (Broxbourne)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will set out a table showing the 1988 electorate for each ward in the borough of Broxbourne.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Borough of Broxbourne

Ward Name	Parliamentary electorate on the 1988 register
Hoddesdon North	5,002
Rye Park	4,671
Hoddesdon Town	4,839

Marriages

Mr. Jopling: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many marriages took place in the United Kingdom in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mrs. Currie: For 1985 and 1986 the numbers were 393,000 and 394,000, respectively. The figure for 1987 is not yet available.

Electorate (Non-metropolitan Counties)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 20 English non-metropolitan counties which have shown the greatest percentage growth in electorate since 1978; and what have been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Non-metropolitan county	Total electors		Difference

Hospitals (Beds)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department uses in assessing the bed size of new general hospitals.

Mrs. Currie: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the number of beds. It is for health authorities to determine the number of beds required to meet planned levels of service provision. There are no restrictions on the size of a new district general hospital. Proposals for major capital investments are required by departmental guidance to be tested by option appraisal and submitted for approval by the Department where costs exceed £5 million. Proposals exceeding £10 million require Treasury approval. The option selected must represent best value for money taking account of local needs and circumstances.

Paupers' Funerals

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many paupers' funerals there have been in each of the past 20 years; at what cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I regret that this information is not available centrally.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend the regulations on mobility allowance, so that recipients of mobility allowance continue to receive this after the age of 75 years.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Exeter (Mr. Hannam) on 10 May at column 82.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assumptions were used on staffing levels, and the distribution of staff on the new clinical grading structure, in estimating the total cost of implementing the Nurses' and Midwives' Pay Review Body report.

Mr. Newton: Estimates of the total cost of implementing the recommendations of the review body for nursing staff, midwives and health visitors were based on the assumption that existing staff would be distributed to the new grading structure on the basis of existing duties and responsibilities.

National Health Service (40th Anniversary)

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans his Department has to mark the 40th anniversary of the National Health Service.

Mr. Moore: As with the marking of previous National Health Service anniversaries, the main activity will be concentrated at local level. To commemorate the anniversary I shall, however, be hosting a reception to which long-serving National Health Service staff in some of the less prominent areas of work will be invited in recognition of their contribution to the service over the past four decades.

Social Security (Appeals)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for social security tribunal appeals (a) the number of appeals outstanding in the United Kingdom, (b) the number of appeals outstanding in Scotland, (c) the approximate time it has taken for appeals which are being heard this week to be processed from the date of receipt, (d) how long it will take for all outstanding appeals to be processed in the United Kingdom and (e) how long it will take for all outstanding appeals to be processed in Scotland; and if, in each case, he will give, where possible, the appeal by category of claim.

Mr. Portillo: The latest available administrative statistics on social security appeal tribunals for Great Britain relate to appeals heard in the second quarter of 1987. At June 1987 there were 107,307 appeals in Great Britain awaiting a hearing and the average time from lodgement of an appeal to the hearing in that quarter was 20·3 weeks. For the same period in Scotland there were 21,547 appeals awaiting a hearing and the average time from lodgement of an appeal to the hearing was 21·6 weeks. Appeals outstanding at June 1987 are shown in the table for each social security benefit for Scotland, England and Wales and Great Britain together with the average time between lodgement and hearing in each case.

I regret that it is not feasible to estimate the length of time it will take for all outstanding appeals in Great Britain and Scotland to be heard.

Note: Some 43 per cent. of the statistical record did not indicate the benefit type; it is thought that the great majority of these relate to supplementary benefit weekly and single payment.

Legionnaire's Disease

Mr. Hannam: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services in view of the further outbreak of Legionnaire's disease at the BBC, what steps are being taken to make regular bacteriological monitoring and treatment of cooling towers compulsory.

Mrs. Currie: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act places a duty on employers to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, that employees and others who may be affected are not exposed to risks to their health. The Department's advice to health authorities is that in the absence of a quick test regular bacteriological monitoring is not appropriate unless legionella is suspected as a source of infection. Together with the Health and Safety Executive and a number of professinal bodies we have issued guidance on the cleaning and disinfection of cooling towers which emphasises the need for regular maintenance.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations his Department has received from Dr. Adrian Stokes, chairman of the executive committee of the Royal Association for Disability and Rehabilitation, about disregarding savings of mobility allowance for the purposes of income support; what reply he has sent; what action he is taking; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Department received a letter from Dr. Stokes and I have replied that the normal capital rules will apply to savings of mobility allowance. This means that up to £6,000, equivalent to five years' savings at the current rate of mobility allowance, can be held without disqualifying a person from receiving income support. I have said elsewhere that I am prepared to look at any particular case of difficulty.

Birmingham Children's Hospital

Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many planned heart operations requiring intensive care unit support have taken place at the Birmingham children's hospital since 1 March; how many children remain on the waiting list requiring immediate treatment; where the job advertisements for ISU nursing staff have appeared; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: I understand that, between 1 March and 16 May, 60 heart procedures that required post-operative intensive care were undertaken at the Birmingham children's hospital. At the end of April, 21 children were judged by clinicians to require heart surgery within the next eight weeks. Jobs for intensive care nursing staff have been advertised in the nursing press including the Nursing Times, and through job forums held in various locations.

The most urgent category within the waiting list, excluding emergency cases which cannot of course be predicted, is children judged by clinicians to require surgery within one month. During April, 10 such children were identified, all of whom have been treated.

Child Benefit

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the value in real terms of child benefit at April 1988 in relation to its value at April 1979 based on the movement in the general index of retail prices during that period.

Mr. Scott: The information requested is not available as the general index of retail prices at April 1988 has not yet been published.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of treating the youth training allowance as earned income for the purposes of housing benefit entitlement.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that this information is not available.

Blood Transfusion Service (HIV Tests)

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have had their blood tested for HIV, by the blood transfusion service, in the United Kingdom in each year from 1985; how many people were found to be positive and how many were then contacted; what is the current average cost to the transfusion service of an HIV test; and what other tests are also routinely undertaken and at what cost.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 9 May 1988]: All blood donations have been tested for antibody to HIV since October 1985. In the rare event that the test is positive the donor is contacted and offered counselling. The figures are shown in the table.

	[1]1985	1986	1987
Number of donations tested for HIV antibody	611,694	2,633,862	2,594,964
Number of donations found HIV antibody positive	14	54	24
Number of people who gave an HIV antibody positive donation and who could not be contacted	None	1	2

[1] October to December only.

The current average cost to the blood transfusion service of an HIV antibody test (including the cost of the test kit and overheads) is estimated at 90p per donation. Other tests routinely undertaken are those for hepatitis B surface antigen, syphilis, blood grouping and the level of haemoglobin. Precise costings for these tests are not held centrally.

Factor VIII

Dr. Owen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the United Kingdom consumption of factor VIII in 1974 and all subsequent years for which the figures are available; and what has been (a) the annual production level of factor VIII from the original and new blood products laboratory, Elstree, over the same period and (b) the capital investment and revenue commitment for United Kingdom production of factor VIII during this period.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The blood products laboratory (Elstree) currently supplies only England and Wales. Scotland has its own facility which also serves Northern Ireland. Information relating to Scotland and Northern Ireland is a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland. Where information is not held, or is not held in the form requested, this is indicated in the notes.

Notes:
[1] Figures until 1984 include a small amount consumed in Northern Ireland.
[2] Figures for haemophilia 'A' patients only.
[3] Production prior to 1988 was in the original laboratory; 1988 production is in the new laboratory. The figure for 1988 is an estimate and reflects the lower levels of production achieved early in the year which have now been surpassed.
[4] (a) For years prior to 1982-83 capital and revenue are not separable and all expenditure is included under revenue;
(b) Expenditure on factor VIII is not separately identifiable;
(c) Expenditure on associated blood laboratories is included from 1979-80 to 1982-83.
(d) From 1983-84 the expenditure is for the whole of the Central Blood Laboratories Authority.

Tax Thresholds

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will provide tax thresholds (a) for a single person, and (b) for a married couple as a percentage of average earnings for each of the years 1958, 1963, 1968, 1973, 1978, 1983 and 1988.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The information is in the table:

Tax year	Single person		Married man without children
	Income tax threshold at current prices £	Threshold as percentage of average earnings per cent.	Income tax threshold at current prices £	Threshold as percentage of average earnings per cent.
1958-59	193	23·8	322	39·7
1963-64	285	29·8	440	46·0
1968-69	283	21·7	437	33·5
1973-74	595	26·4	775	34·3
1978-79	985	20·4	1,535	31·8
1983-84	1,785	20·1	2,795	31·4
1988-89	2,605	20·5	4,095	32·2

Average earnings are those for men in all occupations paid at adult rates who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence. This figure is projected to 1988-89 in accordance with the assumptions given to the Government Actuary for reviewing national insurance contributions in paragraph 3·02 of the Autumn Statement 1987.

Income Tax

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were paying income tax, detailed at each tax banding, during tax year 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont: On the basis of the Budget proposals for income tax, it is estimated that 19·7 million single people and married couples will be liable to income tax at the basic rate only and 1·2 million will be liable at the higher tax rate of 40p.

Mr. Sackville: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the revenue effect of cutting the top rates of income tax to a single higher rate of 40 per cent.

Mr. Roger King: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the revenue effect of cutting the top rates of income tax to a single higher rate of 40 per cent.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Table 4.1 of the Financial Statement and Budget Report gives the latest estimates.

The abolition of rates above 40 per cent. is expected to reduce income tax receipts by £965 million in 1988-89 and £2,070 million in 1989-90 compared with an indexed base.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received concerning changes in the income tax regime arising from the Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 14 April to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn (Mr. Jones) at column 230.

Mr. Bowis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many higher rates of income tax have been eliminated since 1979.

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many higher rates of income tax have been eliminated since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Since 1979 the number of higher rates has been reduced from nine to just one. In addition, the investment income surcharge has been abolished.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate by county and English region the number of adults who, as a result of tax changes outlined in the Budget, will (a) pay no income tax, (b) pay income tax at the lower rate and (c) pay income tax at the higher rate; and if he will express these numbers as a percentage of the adult population.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 13 April 1988]: As a result of the income tax changes in the Budget, it is estimated that 750,000 fewer adults will be liable to income tax and about 270,000 fewer single people and married couples will be liable to income tax at the higher rate than if allowances and thresholds had remained at 1987-88 levels.

The table gives provisional estimates of taxpayers in the United Kingdom in 1988-89 following the Budget.

[1] Percentage of all single people and married couples.

I regret that corresponding information for counties and English regions is not available. Estimates of the number of taxpayers in 1985-86, the latest year for which regional information is available are given in the table.

[1] Married couples count as one unit.
[2] Includes members of the Forces and Merchant Navy and a small number of civil servants serving abroad who have not been allocated to regions.
[3] Excludes taxpayers who are only liable to composite rate tax.

Channel Islands

Mr. Foulkes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking any extension of the clauses of the Finance Bill to either the Channel Islands or the Isle of Man; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's policy in this respect.

Mr. Norman Lamont: My right hon. Friend has received no such representations.

Budget (Select Committee Report)

Mr. Win Griffiths To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he expects to make the Government's formal response to the fourth report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on the Budget, House of Commons Paper No. 400 of Session 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The Government hope to respond to the Committee's recommendations shortly.

Building Industry (Tax Returns)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about tax returns in the building industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Individuals and companies in the building industry are required by statute to make tax returns in the same way as in other industries. Contractors are also required to make returns of payments to sub-contractors and of deductions from payments they make to uncertificated sub-contractors.

Forestry (Tax Exemptions)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking revision of his policy of allowing tax exemptions for forestry to continue during a transitional period for landowners with prior planting approval; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: We have received no representations of this nature.

Child Benefit

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many family units with annual gross earnings of £20,000 to £25,000 and £25,000 and above receive child benefit; and what is the value of these payments for each income group;

(2) how many family units who pay higher rate income tax receive child benefit; and how much these payments cost.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates for 1988-89 are as follows:

	Number of tax units receiving child benefit (thousands)	Cost of child benefit (£ million)
Earned income:
£20,000 to £25,000	600	400
£25,000 and over	690	470
Higher rate taxpayers	500	350

Corporation Tax

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer by how much the standard rate of corporation tax has been reduced since 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The main rate of corporation tax was 52 per cent. for the financial year commencing 1 April 1979. The proposed rate for 1988-89 is 35 per cent.

Taxes

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the weekly income tax payment for (a) a single man on average earnings and (b) a married man with two children aged five and eight years on average earnings and with no other sources of income, at 1988 prices, on the basis of those income tax rates prevailing in 1978 with personal allowances uprated in line with rises in the retail price index; and what are the figures in each case following the implementation of the tax proposals contained in the 1988 Budget.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The table shows the weekly income tax payments of a single man and a married man on average earnings under the tax regime proposed in the 1988 Budget and under the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1988-89 levels according to the statutory formula. Since child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79 they have been excluded from the calculation of the indexed regime. Children do not affect a taxpayer's tax liability in 1988-89, but a married man with two children would be entitled to £14·50 per week in child benefit.

Average earnings are those for full-time males paid at adult rates whose pay is unaffected by absence and are estimated at £244·70 per week in 1988-89.

Weekly income tax liability at average earnings (£)

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, in the manner of his reply of 1 May 1987, Official Report, columns 291-93, he will update, to take account of the 1988 Budget, the information on tax and national insurance for different income ranges and household types.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The first table gives the ranges of earnings where income tax and national insurance contributions form a smaller proportion of gross earnings in 1988-89 than in 1978-79 for various family types. The second table gives the number of single people and married couples whose main source of income is earnings and whose total income is in the ranges specified in the previous table.

Range of earnings[1] where income tax[2] and national insurance contribution[3] form a smaller proportion of gross earnings in 1988-89 than in 1978-79 under the assumptions in the footnotes below

	Range of earnings[1]
Family type	Up to	Other ranges			Over
Single
£ per week	40		47·69	94·104	128
Percentage of average earnings[5]	10		19·28	39·42	53
Married couple both working[4]—no children
£ per week	68	77·10	120·174		318
Percentage of average earnings[5]	16	19·25	30·42		79

Family type	Range of earnings[1] Up to	Other ranges	Over —Four children

£ per week	40	47–84	283
Percentage of average earnings[5]	16	19–34	116

[1] In each of the ranges of percentages of average earnings shown, tax plus national insurance contribution is a smaller proportion of earnings in 1988-89 than in 1978-79. The income levels in £ per week are at 1988-89 levels, rounded to the nearest £1. It is assumed that the taxpayer has no investment income and no relief or allowance other than the appropriate personal allowance.
[2] Less child benefit, where appropriate.
[3] At contracted-in rates.
[4] On the assumption that husband and wife each have the same multiple of the appropriate all occupations figure for average earnings (full-time males and females respective).
[5] Average earnings of full-time males (all occupations) are £92·80 in 1978-79 and £244·70 in 1988-89, for females £59·60 and £161·80 respectively.
[6] Percentage of joint income.

[1] The income levels are those for single people and childless married couples at which, if income were all earned, tax and NIC would be the same proportion of earnings in 1978-79 and 1988-89 (see previous table). Reliable estimates which take account of the numbers of children in each family are not possible.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the tax-unit and tax cut statistics for the income ranges £5,000 to £7,500, £7,500 to £10,000, £50,000 to £70,000, and over £70,000, in the same manner as the reply on 19 April, Official Report, columns 419-20.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer, 5 May 1988]: Estimates for the income ranges requested are as follows. The table shows the estimates of reductions in income tax liabilities at 1988-89 income levels, of the proposed 1988-89 allowances, thresholds and rates, compared with an indexed 1978-79 regime. For the comparison, the 1978-79 allowances and thresholds have been indexed in line with the increase in the retail price index between December 1977 and December 1987. As child tax allowances were being phased out in 1978-79, they have been excluded from the comparison.

Range of income in 1988-89[1] £	Number of units paying tax in 1988-89 (Million)	Reductions in income tax compared with 1978-79 indexed regime Amount (£ Million)	Average per tax unit (£)

7,500-10,000	3·30	1,460	[2]440
50,000-70,000	0·15	1,250	9,160
Over 70,000	0·10	3,530	37,550

[1] All information is in terms of tax units, that is, married couples are counted as one unit and their incomes combined.
[2] By reference to the estimated numbers who would be liable to pay tax under the indexed 1978-79 regime; this number is some 1,100,000 greater than the numbers expected to pay tax in 1988-89, some 175,000 in the range £5,000 to £7,500, and 25,000 in the range £7,500 to £10,000.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report the table of real changes in the various categories of tax between 1978-79 and 1988-89, using the same format of his reply given on 1 May 1987, Official Report, column 295.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 May 1988]: I would refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 22 March 1988 to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Perry Barr (Mr. Rooker), at columns 97-8.

Wheat Prices

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will state the figures for the world price of wheat which were used in compiling his Department's economic progress report, February 1988, with particular reference to chart 1 — price adjustments gap: cereals; and what is the basis for the statement that in the European Community farmers are paid three times world prices for wheat, barley etc.

Mr. Lilley: As stated in the economic progress report article, the charts containing estimates of the price adjustment gap for various agricultural products were taken from "The Political Economy of International Agricultural Policy Reform" published by the Department of Primary Industry, Australia (Canberra 1986) which gives details of estimated representative world food prices.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the information in his reply to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) about personal taxation of 27 March 1987, Official Report, columns 312-340, and 1 May 1987, Official Report, columns 291-294, to include the years 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The figures are given in the tables. For the intervening years I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Blackburn (Mr. Straw) on 27 March 1987, at columns 312-40. For the second part of his question I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, South (Mr. Griffiths) today.

Notes to tables:

1. Income tax payments are calculated on the assumption that the tax units have no other tax reliefs apart from the standard allowances. Earners, including working wives, are assumed to pay class 1 national insurance contributions at the contracted in rate. The figures for national insurance contributions are financial year averages.

2. Average earnings are taken to be the average gross weekly earnings of all full-time males on adult rates with pay unaffected by absence. The levels of average earnings in each year are as follows: 1978-79, £92·80 per week; 1987-88, £229·80 per week (assuming growth of 7¼ per cent. on 1986-87); 1988-89, £244·70 per week (assuming growth of 6¼ per cent. on 1987-88.

3. The two-earner married couple are assumed to have joint earnings of the various multiples of average earnings. In calculating disposable income it is assumed that the joint earnings are split between husband and wife in the ratio 60:40.

4. For the married couple with two children, the percentage column expresses taxes, and so on, as percentages of gross earnings plus child benefit. For this purpose financial year averages are used for child benefit.

5. The estimates of indirect taxes are derived from the 1985 family expenditure survey and are based on the illustrative assumption that 10 per cent. of disposable income is saved. Estimates cannot reliably be made outside the income range for which figures are shown. There are also quite wide variations in spending patterns between households with similar incomes and compositions and, because of sampling variation, there can be substantial differences between the estimates obtained from different family expenditure surveys.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if, with reference to tables 1 and 2 of the Budget press release on independent taxation of husband and wife, he will give the basis on which tax liability under current arrangements has been allocated to a wife's income for the purposes of determining the reduction on the new arrangements;

(2) how family unearned income is allocated between husband and wife for the purposes of computing wife's income in table 1 of the Budget press release on independent taxation of husband and wife.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 May 1988]: Estimates of individuals with reduced income tax liability and their average reductions following the introduction of independent taxation used data from the survey of personal incomes for 1985-86 which was projected to 1990-91 in line with Treasury economic forecasts. The survey collects data from tax offices for husbands and wives separately and for each source of income. The tax liability on the wife's income under the current arrangements was calculated as the difference between the tax liability on the couple's total income and the liability on the husband's income only. It was assumed that all reliefs claimed were used against the husband's income.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the capital gains tax paid by tax units on marginal rates of income tax of (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent., (c) 50 per cent. and (d) 45 per cent. in 1987-88 and the projected capital gains tax receipts for each of these categories in 1988-89 together with the amount forgone as a result of the 1988-89 budget changes.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The latest information available relates to capital gains realised by individuals and trusts in 1985-86 and is not sufficient to permit analyses at the levels of detail requested. Based on preliminary (and still provisional) analyses of that information the capital gains tax payable by individuals with an income tax marginal rate of 40 per cent. or more in 1985-86 on capital gains realised by them in 1985-86 is estimated to be about £650 million. Under the 1988 Budget proposals, it is projected that the capital gains tax payable on gains realised in 1988-89 by individuals with a marginal income tax rate in 1988-89 of 40 per cent. will be about £800 million. The amount of capital gains tax on such gains forgone from these individuals as a result of the changes proposed in the 1988 Budget is estimated to be about £50 million. The figures for 1988-89 take into account tax on gains which may have been realised in 1987-88 following Budget day but which would otherwise have been realised in 1988-89.

Taxation Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for the bottom (a) 60 per cent. and (b) 50 per cent. of taxpayers (i) the total amount of income before tax and (ii) the total amount of income after tax for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 April 1988]: Estimates are given in the table for 1978-79 and 1983-84 to 1987-88. Information for other years could only be provided at disproportionate cost. All estimates are based on information reported to tax offices and collected through the annual surveys of personal incomes. For years before 1985-86, estimates exclude employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes and some investment income on which tax is deducted at source.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of income will be paid in tax by the top 1 per cent., 5 per cent., 10 per cent., and the bottom 50 per cent. of tax payers in 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 April 1988]: Estimates are as follows:

Percentile of taxpayers[1]	Percentage of income paid in tax
Top 1 per cent.	31·5
Top 5 per cent.	25·9
Top 10 per cent.	23·1
Bottom 50 per cent.	10·1

Tax Units

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many tax units in 1988-89 will be on 10 times average earnings or more.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 25 April 1988]: In 1988-89 it is estimated that 120,000 tax units will have total income of more than five times average earnings—£63,600 per year. It is assumed that average earnings are those for men in all occupations who work a full week and whose pay is unaffected by absence (estimated at £244·70 per week in 1988-89). I regret that a reliable estimate of the number of tax units with total income of more than 10 times average earnings is not available as estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes.

Capital Gains

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the accumulated value of unrealised gains between 1965 and 1982 which will now not be liable to taxation as a result of the Budget change.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 April 1988]: I regret that this information is not available.

Tax Liability

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will update the answer to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) of 18 December 1987, Official Report, columns 871-72, to give figures for the year 1988-89 on tax liability.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 April 1988]: Estimates are given in the table for the upper 50 per cent. and lower 50 per cent. of taxpaying single people and married couples analysed by total income liable to tax. The table shows the reduction in income tax liabilities, in a full year at 1988-89 income levels, under the 1988-89 income tax regime compared with the 1978-79 regime indexed to 1988-89 levels by reference to the statutory formula.

Reductions in income tax liabilities in 1988-89 compared with the indexed 1978-79 tax regime

Source of income tax reduction(+)/ increase(−)	Upper 50 per cent.[1]		Lower 50 per cent.[1]
	Amount £ million	Average per tax unit[2] £ per year	Amount £ million	Average per tax unit[2] £ per year
Increase in personal allowances	3,270	310	1,930	180
Abolition of reduced rate band	−1,760	−170	−1,190	−110
Decrease in basic rate	9,190	880	2,630	250
Increase in higher rate threshold	400	40	—	—
Abolition of higher rates above 40 per cent.	4,410	420	—	—
Abolition of Investment Income Surcharge	1,120	110	20	2
Total	16,610	1,590	3,380	320

In the table, the effect of each change has been calculated on the assumption that each of the previous changes has already been made.

[1] Based on 20·9 million single people and married couples expected to pay tax in 1988-89 and excluding a further 1,100,000 who would pay tax under the revalorised 1978-79 regime. All information is in terms of tax units i.e. married couples are counted as one and their incomes combined.

[2] By reference to the numbers paying tax in 1988-89.

Maintenance Payments

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the number of divorced and separated parents where the partner in receipt of maintenance payments has an income, including maintenance payments, that currently falls below the tax threshold where the partner making the payment pays tax at (a) the basic rate and (b) higher rates than the basic rate;

(2) if he will give the total amount of tax relief at present granted on the maintenance payments made by separated or divorced partners at (a) basic rates and (b) higher rates of tax to partners who at present have incomes including maintenance payments that fall below the tax threshold.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers, 29 April 1988]: I regret that information is not available in the form requested. Once a husband and wife are separated or divorced, they are regarded as separate tax units. Tax relief for maintenance payments is claimed by over 500,000 people of whom about four fifths are divorced or separated. About 100,000 are higher rate tax payers.

The total cost of tax relief in respect of maintenance payments in 1987-88 is estimated at £175 million. Of this, £35 million is at rates in excess of the basic rate.

Income and Corporation Taxes Act

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost to the Exchequer in 1988-89 of substituting in section 257(5) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 one half for two thirds.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 4 May 1988]: The full year cost at 1988-89 income levels of substituting one half for two thirds in section 257(5) of the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1988 would be around £4 million. The number of single people and married couples in the band of income where age allowance is withdrawn would increase from 130,000 to 160,000.

Pensioners' Allowance

Mr. Jack: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what would be the cost of raising the married man's personal allowance to £10,000 for pensioners;

(2) what would be the cost of raising the personal allowance to £7,300 for all single pensioners.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 4 May 1988]: The full year cost, at 1988-89 levels of income, of raising the age allowances to £7,300 for single people and to £10,000 for married couples would be about £580 million and £620 million respectively. The estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes and are therefore provisional.

Car Benefit Tax

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the equivalent in real terms of the salary at which car benefit tax becomes payable if the salary level of £8,500 in 1976 terms were translated to 1988 terms.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The earnings threshold at which the benefit of a company car provided for private use becomes taxable was £5,000 in 1976-77. If this threshold had been indexed in line with inflation according to the statutory formula for increasing personal allowances and thresholds, the threshold in 1988-89 would be £13,960. A salary level of £8,500 in 1976-77 would, if indexed in the same manner, be increased to £23,720 in 1988-89.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total amount accruable to the Exchequer as a result of car benefit tax in each of the past five years.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The income tax liability in each of the years 1984-85 to 1988-89 arising from the scale changes for the private use of company cars is shown in the table.

	£ million
1984-85	180
1985-86	210
1986-87	[1]260
1987-88	[1]310
1988-89	[1]540

[1] Provisional

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received seeking legislation to raise the tax threshold at which car benefit tax becomes payable; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 6 May 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations suggesting an increase in the earnings threshold at which the company car scale charges and the charges on other benefits-in-kind are payable. The Government's view, which has been reflected in response to such representations, is that since in principle remuneration in kind should be treated in exactly the same way as cash remuneration irrespective of the level of the employee's earnings an increase in the threshold would not be justified.

Finance (No. 2) Bill (Notes on Clauses)

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps, when any notes on clauses on the Finance (No. 2) Bill 1988 are published, to make them available to interested members of the public.

Mr. Major [holding answer 6 May 1988]: No. These notes are designed for Members examining the Finance Bill in Committee. They serve a transitory purpose only and are not intended as a permanent record. The general public is already well served by press releases issued on Budget day and on publication of the Finance Bill. The Treasury's clause-by-clause summary of the Bill was reprinted in the Financial Times on 15 April.

Child Care

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total revenue received each year from tax levied on employer subsidised child care; and from parents in how many workplace nurseries the Inland Revenue collects the tax.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 9 May 1988]: Firm estimates are not available, but it is thought that there are about 50 employer-subsidised nurseries providing around 2,000 places and that the tax charged on this benefit might be of the order of £1 million per year.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cleaners

Ms. Walley: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick-upon-Tweed, as representing the House of Commons Commission, how many vacant cleaning posts there were on 13 May as a result of illness and people leaving voluntarily in the Palace of Westminster; what is the establishment for such posts; how many posts are actually filled; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Beith: On 13 May the complement of posts for cleaning staff employed by the House of Commons Commission was 88. On that day there were 74 staff in post of whom none was sick. The difference represents the number of unfilled vacancies due to the steady turnover of staff and is in part compensated for by paid overtime.

Telephones (Cleaning)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council what provision is made for regularly cleaning telephones in the Palace of Westminster.

Mr. Wakeham: Telephones in public areas of the Palace of Westminster are cleaned once every month under arrangements made by the communications manager. Cleaning of telephones of Members, their staff and of staff of the House is a personal responsibility and cleaning sachets are available for this purpose.

Vending Machine (Upper Waiting Hall)

Ms. Walley: To ask the Lord President of the Council why the vending machine in the Upper Waiting Hall is closed during recesses; and when was the last occasion on which the machine was rigorously cleaned.

Mr. Wakeham: The vending machine in the Upper Waiting Hall is provided for the use of Members and others attending Committees meeting on days when the House is sitting; as such it is not considered necessary for it to operate during recesses. The machine's supply mechanism is automatically cleansed with boiling water twice a day. If the hon. Lady has a particular complaint in mind, may I suggest that, in the first instance, she contacts the general manager of the Refreshment Department, who has direct responsibility for this machine.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he will provide details for each for the 11 offices where the new restart questionnaire is being tested of how many of those referred to adjudication officers have been suspended from benefit; how long each had been claiming benefit; and how many of those suspended from claiming benefit were referred by means other than a restart interview;

(2) if he will provide details for each of the 11 offices testing the new restart questionnaire of the number of people referred to adjudication officers in March because of doubts about their availability for work; and if he will provide the fullest possible breakdown of those so referred by age and sex of those so referred with details of how long the individuals concerned had been claiming benefit.

Mr. Lee: No one is referred, as the result of a restart interview, directly to an adjudication officer.

When a question arises at a restart interview about a person's availability for work, the case is referred to the unemployment benefit office. This is then examined by officials and, where appropriate, referred to the adjudication officer for a decision on entitlement.

These referrals are not recorded separately from other availability referrals to adjudication officers. The detailed information requested could be obtained only at a disproportionate cost.

A change in procedures announced by the Government in January has meant that claimants with current benefit claims, as in the case of restart clients, will continue to receive benefits while their availability for work is being considered. New regulations, to take effect from 2 May, will extend the same concession to people receiving unemployment benefit.

Information on the number of people referred in the month of March from the 11 restart launch offices to an unemployment benefit office because of a question about their availability for work is shown in the table.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish up-to-date figures for both the Birmingham and Solihull and Coventry and Warwickshire areas showing how many unemployed people have, since the introduction of the restart initiative (a) been called for a restart interview, (b) attended a restart interview, (c) had their benefit disallowed for failing to attend a restart interview, (d) been referred to a claimant adviser as a result of a restart interview and (e) been referred to a disablement resettlement officer as a result of a restart interview, together with a breakdown of these figures to show outcomes for each three-month or similar time period.

Mr. Lee: The figures requested in (a) to (e) are given in the table. We do not know how many of those interviewed ultimately end up in a job or other menu opportunity as a result of the interview.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish up-to-date figures for both the Birmingham and Solihull and Coventry and Warwickshire areas, showing the outcome of interviews conducted under the restart scheme, covering the period from the introduction of the scheme, in the same format used in the reply given on 6 November 1986, Official Report, columns 523-24, together with a breakdown of these figures to show outcomes for each three-month or similar time period.

Mr. Lee: The number of people interviewed under the restart programme and the numbers referred to the various menu items between 1 July 1986 and 25 March 1988 are shown in the table. We do not know how many of those interviewed ultimately end up in a job or other opportunity as a result of the restart interview.

Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish up-to-date figures for both the Birmingham and Solihull and Coventry and Warwickshire areas, showing the outcome of interviews conducted under the restart scheme, in the same format used in table 3 of annex 1 of the MSC directors report presented to the Manpower Services Commission at its meeting in October 1987, MSC/87/24, together with a breakdown of these figures to show outcomes for each three-month or similar time period.

Mr. Lee: The number of people interviewed under the restart programme and the numbers referred to the various menu items are shown in the table.

We do not know how many of those ultimately end up in a job or training programme.

Employment Training Programme

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether fees paid to assessing agents on the employment training programme will take account of any extra cost of assessing people with special or complex needs.

Mr. Nicholls: Where either specialised or further assessment is required, this will be made available through the employment rehabilitation service (ERC) or, where appropriate, through a specialist training manager who can offer this facility. The funding that ERCs or training managers receive will take account of any additional assessment provision they mount. It should also be noted that special help is available to assist training agents to accommodate people with special or complex needs, in the form of a communicator service for the deaf (CSD) and personal reader service for the blind (PRSB).

Training for Employment

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he is making to ensure disabled people will get full benefit from the new training for employment scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: Features of employment training designed particularly to help people with disabilities include exemption from the normal eligibility condition of six months duration of unemployment; access to specialised assessment, where appropriate, through the employment rehabilitation service; extended introduction for those who need a gradual introduction to full-time training; additional payments to meet the costs of special training needs when the provision is necessarily more expensive; access to special aids, and communication services for the sensorily handicapped; and residential training where needs can best be met in this way.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what provisions he has made for the part-time employment of disabled persons in the new training for employment scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: Participants on employment training will be trainees, not employees. A period of extended introduction will be available for people, including some people with disabilities, who need a period of preparation before they are able to take advantage of full-time training. Extended introduction will be for up to 10 weeks and individuals will be able to attend part-time initially.

Further consideration is being given to the issue of part-time participation in the mainstream of employment training.

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he will take to ensure that voluntary organisations that provide services to disabled people under the community programme will be able to maintain those programmes following the introduction of the training for employment scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: At least 170,000 of the 300,000 places on employment training will offer practical training on projects. Employment training will build on the strengths of the existing programmes, including projects providing services for disabled people. Local staff of the Manpower Services Commission will be doing all they can in coming months to help community programme providers and others to develop their activities so that they can meet the training requirements of the new programme.

Disabled People

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) registered disabled persons and (b) disabled persons were seeking employment at jobcentres for each of the standard regions in 1985, 1986 and 1987.

Mr. Lee: I regret that this information is not available in the form requested but the numbers of people with disabilities registered for work at jobcentres on 8 March 1985, 4 April 1986 and 3 April 1987 were as follows:

Sheltered Employment

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide figures for 1985, 1986 and 1987 and for each standard region of the number of sheltered placement scheme places (a) approved and (b) occupied.

Mr. Lee: Information is not available in the form requested. Information on numbers of places occupied in each employment service region against the number each region had authority to fill in the 1986-87 and 1987-88 financial years is as set out. Occupancy figures as at the end of the financial year 1985-86 are also given. Regions were not given a specified number of places to fill until 1986-87.

[1] The figure of 306 occupied places relates to the whole of the former midlands region.

Job Training Scheme

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will estimate the number of people who have left the job training scheme with a vocational qualification and express this also as a percentage of all people leaving the scheme.

Mr. Nicholls: The information is not available. The Manpower Services Commission has commissioned a follow-up survey which will give information on qualifications. The results will be available shortly.

Hantergantick Quarry

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether prosecutions are to be undertaken against the owners at Hantergantick quarry, St. Bernard under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974, arising from an accident occurring on 25 August 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholls: The Health and Safety Executive is considering whether to prosecute.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Playgroup Staff

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what training and education is provided to playgroup staff in each of the education and library board areas in Northern Ireland by the Department of Education;

(2) what training and education is provided to playgroup staff in each of the health and social services board areas in Northern Ireland by the Department of Health and Social Services.

Mr. Needham: The Department does not provide training and education to playgroup staff. It does, however, grant aid the Northern Ireland Pre-School Playgroups Association (NIPPA), whose functions include the provision of advice, training and support for these staff. In conjunction with NIPPA, local colleges of further education run courses for playgroup staff, parents and volunteers. Since 1985, NIPPA has also been running tutor training programmes for experienced leaders of playgroups and mother and toddler groups. In addition, the staff of health and social services boards' playgroups can attend courses offered by the boards as part of their in-service training programmes.

Pre-school Playgroups

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what financial or other assistance is given to pre-school playgroups by (a) each area health and social services board in Northern Ireland and (b) each education and library board in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to a question by the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 25 February 1988, at column 329.

Mother and Toddler Groups

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many mother and toddler groups operate in Northern Ireland; and what financial assistance is offered to them and by whom.

Mr. Needham: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Foyle (Mr. Hume) on 25 February 1988, at columns 328-29.

Under-fives Initiative

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has any plans to introduce an under-fives initiative in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Needham: Social services for the under-fives form an integral part of the Government's overall preventive strategy in child care, the development of which is identified as a specific objective in the "Regional Strategy for 1987-1992", published by the Department of Health and Social Services in August last year.

Progress toward this objective is being achieved through the detailed operational plans drawn up annually by the health and social services boards in the light of local needs, priorities and available resources. Although I have no plans to introduce a specific under-fives initiative in Northern Ireland, the Department of Health and Social Services has this year made £6,500 available for a scheme offering small, non-recurrent grants to local voluntary groups who provide services for the under-fives. This is slightly more, in per capita terms, than the corresponding small grants scheme in England and Wales.

AIDS

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if, in the light of the recent survey of the level of awareness of the risks of acquiring AIDS among students in Northern Ireland, he will reassess his health education policy in the Province.

Mr. Needham: AIDS public education policy in the Province is subject to continuous review in the light of the findings of attitude and awareness surveys which are carried out from time to time. In line with this approach the results of the study referred to by my hon. Friend are being taken into account by the Department of Health and Social Services and health and social services boards in planning future health education measures required both locally and for the Province as a whole.

Tourism

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money has been provided for the promotion and development of tourism in Northern Ireland from European Economic Community funds in each year since 1973; and to what extent such funds have been additional to Her Majesty's Government's expenditure.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The following amounts have been received from the European Community for the promotion and development of tourism in Northern Ireland.

TOTAL	[2]10·705

[1] Provisional.
[2] The total includes £3·46 million receipts under the special programme for the border areas during the period 1983-88.

The overall level of EC receipts is taken into account in the Government's decisions on public expenditure allocations, and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

European Community Payments

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money Northern Ireland has received from the European regional development fund in each financial year from 1 January 1973; how much of these receipts each year represented a cash addition to the Northern Ireland economy; and how much was used to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The following amounts were received from the European regional development fund:

[1] Provisional outturn.

[2] The figures show total European regional development fund receipts brought to account in Northern Ireland. It should be noted that awards totalling £10·5 million were decommitted by the European Commission on failed industrial projects.

European regional development fund assistance is earned by industrial and infrastructure projects, and by programmes combining elements of both. Receipts for infrastructure projects undertaken by non-central Government bodies are passed on to them and represent a direct benefit to those bodies by enabling them to reduce their capital indebtedness.

Receipts for infrastructure projects undertaken by central Government and for industrial projects are paid into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund. All the receipts are subject to normal European Commission audit arrangments.

The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government's decisions on public expenditure allocations, and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money in Northern Ireland has been allocated from the European social fund in each financial year since 1 January 1973; how much of these receipts were paid to the private sector and how much to the public sector; how much each year represented a cash addition to the Northern Ireland economy; and how much was used to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

Receipts earned by the private sector and by non-central Government public sector bodies are paid to the claimant. The receipts represent cash additions to the recipients. Receipts earned by central Government are paid into the Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund. All ESF receipts are subject to EC audit arrangements.

The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government decisions on public expenditure allocations, and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money Northern Ireland has received in each financial year from 1 January 1973, from the European Economic Community apart from payments under the European regional development fund, the European social fund and the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guidance section.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The following amounts have been identified as being received in Northern Ireland from EC sources other than three structural funds:

[1] Provisional outturn.

These figures contain two main elements. First, some £57·9 million of receipts received under the special urban renewal regulation, which provided assistance for infrastructure projects in the Belfast area. Second, certain receipts, totalling some £47·9 million, from the guarantee section of the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund. While the bulk of guarantee section receipts are disbursed centrally by the Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce and details of payments are not generally maintained at regional level, accounting responsibility for certain of the schemes was transferred to the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland in 1987-88. Accordingly, the table includes these amounts as well as payments under the calf premium scheme which, being unique to Northern Ireland, is also accounted for by the Department and which appeared in 1982-83.

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much money Northern Ireland has received in each financial year up to 31 December 1987 from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guidance section; how much of these receipts were paid to the private sector and how much to the public sector; how much of these receipts represented a cash addition to the Northern Ireland economy; and how much each year was used to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 3 May 1988]: The following amounts were received from the European agricultural guidance and guarantee fund guidance section:

[2] Includes reference to the approximate share of total expenditure in Northern Ireland on various structural schemes which were applied throughout the United Kingdom.
[3] Provisional outturn.

In addition, £443,000 has been received by the public sector for socio-economic training.

All these receipts represent cash additions to the recipients and are subject to normal European Community audit arrangements.

The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government's decisions on public expenditure allocations and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

European Community

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much Northern Ireland's share of the United Kingdom's payment into the European Economic Community was from 1 January 1973 to 31 December 1987; how much Northern Ireland's share of the receipts was; how much of these receipts each year represented a cash addition to the Northern Ireland economy; and how much was used to offset Government expenditure on Northern Ireland.

Mr. Stanley [holding answer 5 May 1988]: It is not possible to determine Northern Ireland's actual share of the United Kingdom's contribution to the European Community because payments are made on a national and not a regional basis. Similarly it is not possible to identify the full extent of receipts from the Community. However, a Northern Ireland attributed share of the contribution to the EC does exist as an accounting mechanism necessary because of the operation of a separate Northern Ireland Consolidated Fund. The attributed share does not count as an item of expenditure within the Northern Ireland public expenditure programme and has therefore no bearing on the level of public expenditure in the Province.

Figures for the notional attribution of part of Northern Ireland's share of the United Kingdom's payments and for those areas where the receipts are identified are as follows:

Financial Year	Attributed share (part) £ million	Identified receipts £ million
1973-74	1·0	—
1974-75	5·6	3·6
1975-76	7·9	3·6

1987-88	[1]104·7	[2]141·0
Total	652·1	[3]760.0

[1] Attributed share figures for the last two years are provisional estimates which will be revised when final details of tax revenues are determined.
[2] Provisional outturn, which includes EAGGF guarantee section receipts for which the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland assumed accounting responsibility in 1987-88.
[3] This comprises total identified EC receipts in Northern Ireland, including those from outside the main EC funds.

All receipts represent cash additions to the recipients and are subject to normal European Community audit arrangements.

The overall level of receipts is taken into account in the Government's decisions on public expenditure allocations and their availability enables public expenditure to be maintained at a higher level than would otherwise be feasible.

Written Answers to Questions

Wednesday 18 May 1988

PRIME MINISTER

Fast Reactor Programme

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on the results of the review conducted by the chief scientific adviser to the Cabinet on the future prospects for the fast reactor programme in the United Kingdom.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing to add to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy to the hon. Member for Ashfield (Mr. Haynes) on 9 May 1988, at columns 6-7.

Health Authorities

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Prime Minister, what arrangements are made for co-ordination between the Secretary of State for Social Services and the Secretary of State for Education and Science in regard to the statutory duty imposed on health authorities by the Education Act 1981.

The Prime Minister: Co-ordination between the two Departments takes place at all levels as necessary over the operation of the Education Act 1981.

Progress on the implementation of the Act continues to be monitored by both Departments. They are at present reviewing the relevant legislation, regulations and guidance.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Information Technology Research (Disabled People)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what arrangements have been made to ensure that the new national advisory body on co-ordination of publicly funded information technology research meets the needs of disabled people in this area.

Mr. Butcher: The new advisory arrangements have been established to provide co-ordinated advice to the Department and the Science and Engineering Research Council about their support for IT research. Virtually all this is now pre-competitive research into IT enabling technologies and is not concerned with specific applications. Nevertheless, this should strengthen the United Kingdom's capability in this field and, in due course, enable United Kingdom suppliers to meet better the needs of users of IT, including those with special needs such as disabled people.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many references have been made to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in each year from 1978-79 to 1987-88; and if he will list them, giving in each case the reason stated for the reference.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Sixty-five mergers have been referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission over the period 1978-79 to 1987-88. This excludes newspaper mergers and monopoly and competitive practice references. The 65 merger references are listed in chronological order.

Press notices issued at the time of the reference give details of the reason for reference. In the majority of cases the reason for reference was competition.

Contested Takeover Bids

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether his Department has any evidence as to the involvement of private investigators or security firms in contested takeover bids.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No.

Emray (Investigation)

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when his Department's investigation into Emray was instigated.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Mr. Philip Henry Bovey and Mr. Ian George Salter were appointed on 3 September 1984 under section 172 of the Companies Act 1948 (now section 442 of the Companies Act 1985) to investigate and report on the membership of Emray plc (now Equity and General plc).

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster whether any legal proceedings are contemplated against those accused by his Department's report into Emray of taking part in illegal concert parties to buy shares.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are still considering whether such action should be taken.

Companies Act Investigations

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many investigations have been ordered under (a) section 432 and (b) section 447 of the Companies Act, for each of the years 1978-79 to 1987-88; and how many have been made in the present year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Relevant particulars are as follows:

Year	Companies Act 1985

Welsh Water Authority

Mr. William Powell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster when the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report on the efficiency and costs of, and the service provided by, the Welsh water authority will be published.

Mr. Maude: The report is published today.

The commission was asked to assess the extent to which it is possible for WWA to make net cost savings by end March 1990, and indicate the scale of gross increases and reductions in spending. This is the first time the commission has been asked to suggest specific figures for savings, making this reference unique among the 28 made to date under section 11 of the Competition Act 1980.

The report explains that in addition to making its own inquiries into the efficiency of WWA's operations, the commission discussed with the WWA the latter's own efforts and plans to reduce costs. During the course of the inquiry WWA reviewed its estimates to produce new savings, to yield a net cost reduction of £2·9 million in comparison with its actual costs in 1986-87.

In noting the scope for further improvements in efficiency, the commission recognise that WWA has already taken important steps in this direction and has embarked on a number of major programmes to improve its efficiency. Since 1984, WWA has made substantial and worthwhile changes in its management structure, and measures to improve its management information systems and to improve productivity are under way. It is modifying its capital appraisal procedures and aiming to give higher priority to cost-saving investment. The commission considers that, although many initiatives might have been taken earlier, the right policies are now in place.

The commission found serious problems in the area of customer accounting and debt collection and considered that arrears of debt have risen to unacceptable levels under the existing customer billing system. While the deficiencies had been recognised previously the priority afforded to the development of a new system was not fully reflected in the support and resources given to it. Only now is a new computerised system in the final stages of development. The commission considers it essential that the new system should be in operation in time for the 1989 billing and emphasises that the authority will have to ensure that sufficient resources are available to keep inputs up to date and take prompt action to collect identified debts. The commission accepts that WWA is now giving sufficient attention to the customer accounting system and to the collection of debts and so does not find that in these or any other matters the authority is operating against the public interest.

Overall the Commission concludes that WWA should be able to achieve a new target of net savings amounting to a cost reduction of £2·9 million on 1986-87 costs and that particular areas in which savings might be made are increased manpower efficiency, closer attention to the charges made by agencies (mainly district councils) which provide sewerage services, and improved benefits from cost-saving investment.

The authority will be producing a preliminary response to the commission's findings within three to four months in the light of which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales will make a statement.

Textile Imports

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing the value, and the percentage it constitutes by value, of textile imports into the United Kingdom for each year signatory to the multi fibre arrangement for the years 1979 to 1987.

Mr. Alan Clark [holding answer 16 May 1988]: The answer is as follows:

[3] For all but two of the MFA signatories the agreement was initialised in 1986. For China, the agreement was initialised in 1984 and for Egypt it was initialised in 1979 and ended in 1986.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Pupil Records

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when the results of the consultations on the keeping and disclosure of pupil records will be published and the regulations made.

Mrs. Rumbold: We shall announce the results of the consultation and lay regulations before the end of this year.

Education at Home

Mr. Lester: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many children are being educated at home by their parents under section 36 of the 1944 Act in England and Wales;

(2) what change there has been in the numbers of children being educated at home by their parents under section 36 of the 1944 Act in England and Wales over the past five years;

(3) how his Department monitors the education of children who are taught at home by their parents.

Mr. Dunn: It is for the local education authorities to monitor the education of children who are taught otherwise than at school. The Department does not do so, and has no information on the numbers being educated at home.

The Education Acts lay a duty on the parent to ensure that a child receives suitable full-time education, either by regular attendance at school or otherwise, and require the LEA to take action if it appears that the parent's duty is not being performed. Her Majesty's inspectorate of schools' powers to inspect do not extend to education at home.

Student Support

Mr. John M. Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether a period of full-time education during which a student supports himself from accumulated earnings, earned within the qualifying period, counts towards the aggregated three-year period of self-support in the interpretation of awards regulation 3(1)(b).

Mr. Jackson: Yes. A student is independent in the meaning of the regulation if he has supported himself out of his own earnings for any periods adding up to three years before the first year of his course. It is immaterial whether he supported himself out of current earnings or savings from previous earnings.

Higher Education

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to publish for consultation the draft articles of government for higher education corporations within the ambit of the Polytechnic and Colleges Funding Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: We intend to publish draft model articles of government for the higher education corporations in June for consultation, so that, assuming the Education Reform Bill is passed, model articles can be issued shortly after Royal Assent.

Research Reactor (Grenoble)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy, 29 April, Official Report, column 333, on international collaboration involving the United Kingdom, what involvement the United Kingdom has in the multilateral high flux research reactor in Grenoble in partnership with France and the Federal Republic of Germany; how long the United Kingdom has been a participant in the project; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: The United Kingdom is involved with the multilateral high flux research reactor in Grenoble through its partnership in the Institut Max von Laue—Paul Langevin (ILL) with France and West Germany. It has a 33 per cent. share in the partnership. The United Kingdom joined the partnership in 1972 for an initial period of 10 years and this was extended so that the present agreement continues until 1992. The basis of United Kingdom membership after 1992 will be a matter for negotiation with the other parties to the agreement. Originally the ILL was a project between France and West Germany which started in 1967. The United Kingdom subscription currently costs about £8·6 million per annum.

WALES

Further Education

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many pupils, and what percentage, remained in full-time education after 16 and 17 years of age in each local authority in 1978-79 and the latest date available and the total for Wales.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Figures are not available for 1978-79. The latest information available is for the 1986-87 academic year and is as follows:

Welsh Pupils in Full-Time Education in Schools and Colleges of Higher and Further Education in Wales[1]

Home Authority	Aged 16[2]		Aged 17[2]

[2] Age as at 31 August 1986.
[3] As a percentage of the 1986 mid year home population estimates.

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Alan Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what estimate he has made of the cost in Wales of the nurses' pay settlement in 1988-89 and in each of the next two years; and how much of the extra cost in each year is to be met from within the existing Welsh expenditure programmes.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 16 May 1988]: The cost in Wales of the nurses' pay settlement in 1988-89 is estimated at £40·295 million. After taking account of the allowance for pay and price inflation built into health authorities' 1988-89 allocations the additional cost to be met by district health authorities this year is estimated to be £27·41 million. Authorities will receive their full shares of the estimated cost from extra funds that we shall shortly be making available.

It is not possible at present to estimate the additional costs in future years as this will depend on the effects of the new grading structures to be introduced.

Pre-school Playgroups Association

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much he has paid to the Pre-school Playgroups Association movement in Wales in real terms for each of the years from 1980 to 1988-89.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 17 May 1988]: The annual grants paid to the Pre-school Playgroups Association in Wales at 1987-88 prices in respect of its headquarters expenses for the years ending 31 March 1980-88 is as follows:

	Pounds
to 31 March 1981	84,297
31 March 1982	94,192
31 March 1983	106,687
31 March 1984	114,820
31 March 1985	111,970
31 March 1986	110,382
31 March 1987	124,425
31 March 1988	122,997

Grant assistance for 1988-89 is currently under consideration.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to pay Pre-school Playgroups Association, Wales, all-Wales mental health strategy moneys; and how much, in real terms, he has paid from this source in each of the years from 1983 to 1987-88.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 17 May 1988]: On the assumption that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the all-Wales mental handicap strategy, funding from this source has been provided direct to the Pre-school Playgroups Association (PPA) (Wales) as set out in the following table (1987-88 constant prices):

Year	£
1983-84	1,415
1984-85	7,383
1985-86	27,447
1986-87	30,250
1987-88	21,500

We are currently considering an application for further funding.

As indicated in my answer to the hon. Gentleman on 10 May, at column 73, all-Wales mental handicap strategy moneys are also made available to voluntary groups, including PPA, through local authorities.

Rating Reform

Mr. Nicholas Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the average rate paid by a domestic ratepayer in each Welsh district in 1988-89, together with his estimate for the community charge which would be payable by each payee in 1988-89 had the proposed system been in operation.

Mr. Grist [pursuant to his reply, 10 May 1988, c. 72]: Average rate bills per household for 1988-89 are given in the following table:

ENERGY

Radioactive Waste

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the current total level of radioactive wastes returnable to each country under British Nuclear Fuels plc contracts.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The volumes of waste which are likely to arise from BNFL's existing overseas reprocessing contracts with return of waste options are:

high-level waste, 200 cu m;
intermediate-level waste, 3,500 cu m;
low-level waste, 23,000 cu m.

The waste mentioned will arise from contracts with electricity utilities in the Federal Republic of Germany, Italy, Japan, the Netherlands and Switzerland. The volume arising from each country is commercially confidential.

Sellafield (Emergency Exercise)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on (a) the planning assumptions adopted, (b) the effectiveness of the communication within and between the emergency services, (c) the lessons learnt by his Department, the emergency services and Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, and (d) the total cost incurred for the simulated emergency exercise conducted at British Nuclear Fuels plc, Sellafield on 4 May.

Mr. Michael Spicer: An emergency exercise to test the offsite centre for BNFL's Sellafield site was held under the supervision of Her Majesty's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate on 4 May. The exercise was designed to test the procedures for responding to an accident involving an offsite release of radioactivity. A detailed assessment of the exercise is now being carried out by BNFL, in close consultation with the nuclear inspectorate, local authorities, local emergency services and Government Departments and agencies involved. The lessons learnt will be incorporated in revised arrangements and procedures for the Sellafield site and, where appropriate, in the emergency plans for other nuclear installations. It is not possible to calculate the full costs of the exercise, which were largely confined to staff time involved, as some dozen different organisations participated.

TRANSPORT

Ships (Refuse Discharge)

78. Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to change the regulations governing the discharge of refuse from ships near British coasts.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are at present no regulations governing the discharge of ship-generated refuse (garbage) into the sea. However, with the coming into force of annex V of the international convention for the prevention of pollution from ships 1973, regulations are being prepared to implement its provisions so as to come into force on 31 December 1988.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what increase in road traffic is anticipated to arise from the completion of the Channel tunnel; and if he will take steps to ensure that the road transport system for the south-east will be sufficient to meet the increased demand.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The effect of the tunnel on traffic volumes in the south-east will vary from route to route. For example, on the M20 in the vicinity of the tunnel, average daily August flows are predicted to increase from about 29,000 (without a tunnel) to 34,000 by the year 2008; for the A259 the increase is predicted to be less than 1,000 vehicles per day.

The trunk road programme is kept under constant review. Schemes are added as need is identified.

A number of major trunk road improvements in the south-east are already programmed, in particular on the M20/A20 and A259 routes. The Hastings eastern bypass, St. Mary's bay and Dymchurch bypass on the A259, and the M20/A259 Hythe improvement were added at the last programme review in 1987.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will detail the latest traffic forecasts available to him for Channel tunnel passengers and freight (a) to London and (b) to destinations beyond London; and what plans he is making to keep these forecasts up to date.

Mr. David Mitchell: The latest available forecasts of Channel tunnel passengers and freight on through rail services was released by British Rail at a recent seminar and I am sure that British Rail would make its forecasts available to my hon. Friend. Eurotunnel plc has also produced its own forecasts of Channel tunnel traffic which are available to my Department. Eurotunnel's forecasts were published in part in its share flotation offer for sale published, inter alia, in the Financial Times of 18 November 1987 — available from the Library. British Rail, Eurotunnel and the other organisations that have produced Channel tunnel traffic forecasts will no doubt update their forecasts whenever they think it necessary.

Although the Channel tunnel is a private sector undertaking the level of Channel tunnel traffic has wide implications for transport in the United Kingdom and therefore my Department forms its own view on the available forecasts where they have implications for the public sector.

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether his Department treats applications from commercial operators seeking to provide themselves with environmentally acceptable links to Channel tunnel rail infrastructure as fulfilling the criteria for eligibility for section 8 grants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is open to any consignor or freight handler to make an application for section 8 grant towards private rail facilities where moving freight by rail, rather than by road, will lead to environmental benefits. Such applications, whether they involve Channel tunnel traffic or not, will need to meet the normal freight facilities grants criteria and will be considered on their merits.

City Commuter Services Group

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has discussed the report of the city commuter services group with the chairman of British Rail; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Wrexham (Dr. Marek) on 16 May 1988 at column 664.

British Rail Stations (Toilet Facilities)

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if, when he next meets the chairman of British Rail, he will raise with him the provision of toilet facilities at all British Rail stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: This is entirely a matter for the board's commercial judgment.

Stansted Rail Traffic

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has about the new works required to bring Stansted rail traffic into Liverpool street; and what future plans there are for diverting this traffic to St. Pancras.

Mr. David Mitchell: I understand from British Rail that it plans to complete work on the rail link to Stansted airport by January 1991, allowing it to operate a fast, direct service to Liverpool street station. The total cost, including specially built new trains, will be £45 million at today's prices. I understand that BR has no plans at present to divert any of this traffic to St. Pancras, but that it will avoid taking any action to preclude its doing so in future should the need arise.

Railway Electrification

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will indicate the change in statistical information which has resulted in his recent decision to approve electrification of the Portsmouth to Southampton and Portsmouth to Eastleigh railway lines; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: I approved the board's formal proposal for electrification of these lines on 20 April on the grounds that the project would help BR reduce its operating costs and improve the service to passengers.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of his Department's meeting with representatives from Manchester airport on 13 May in regard to United States carrier access to the airport; and if there is any further action he will be taking.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: There was a useful exchange of views; further action will be taken at the appropriate time.

Road Safety (Departmental Staff)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statistical information is available on the numbers of personnel employed by his Department on road safety matters.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Road and vehicle safety directorate, which includes the vehicle inspectorate and driver training and testing organisation, employs 3,755 staff. Other parts of the Department directly contributing to road safety include the highways command, the transport and road research laboratory, the traffic area offices and, as regards vehicle records and documentation, the driver vehicle and licensing centre at Swansea.

Driver Licensing System

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what responses he has had to the consultation document on proposals for a new driver licensing system in the 1990s.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The replies indicate general support for the concept of harmonisation with other EC member states.

The idea of a single licence showing all driving entitlement was favourably received. Support for the traffic commissioners retaining responsibility for the conduct of vocational drivers was virtually unanimous. Some reservations were expressed about the proposal to bring the level of medical checks for HGV drivers into line with those that currently apply to drivers of public service vehicles.

The categories of driving entitlement in the EC model system caused serious concern among voluntary and community transport organisations as well as motor manufacturers.

Over 80 per cent. of the responses suggested that tighter controls on drivers of minibuses and light goods vehicles would seriously impair the operation of these services as well as the demand for the vehicles in question.

The entitlement of existing ordinary licence holders to drive minbuses and light goods vehicles will be preserved in the new licensing system.

The Department will press strongly in the negotiations on the forthcoming second Community driving licence directive to preserve the existing arrangements for new drivers. This should not affect the other changes which are considered worth while.

We shall be seeking the necessary legislation at the first available opportunity.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police National Computer

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what new facilities will be available to the new police national computer through its proposed link to the driver and vehicle licensing centre; and what police national computer facilities will be available to the driver and vehicle licensing centre.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A comprehensive survey of the requirements of the police for PNC services is presently in hand and a direct link to the DVLC is one of the potential applications being considered. No decisions on new applications will be taken, however, before the results of this user requirements survey have been carefully considered in terms of their technical, financial and any other relevant implications.

Police (Complaints)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce legislation to set up an independent non-police body under the control of the Police Complaints Authority to investigate allegations of serious misconduct on the part of the police officers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. The Police Complaints Authority already has extensive powers to supervise and direct the progress of the investigation of serious allegations against police officers.

Police Officers (Notebooks)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will introduce a system of time-stamping police officers' notebooks where it is intended that the contents of these notebooks are to be used as evidence in court proceedings.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not persuaded of the necessity for such action. If an occurrence is not written up at the time, or very shortly after it takes place, the officer concerned will be expected to record the date and time at which it is subsequently noted. In the Metropolitan police this is a requirement in standing orders.

Mr. Roc Sandford

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis as to why no response has been received by Mr. Roc Sandford or his solicitors to a complaint addressed to the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis on 27 February 1986 alleging criminal activities on the part of police officers at West End Central police station.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand that the letter of 27 February 1986 from Mr. Sandford's solicitors was handled as a letter before action in civil litigation. Its contents have been dealt with in subsequent communication between the Metropolitan police solicitor and Mr. Sandford's legal advisers.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make public the reports of the two internal police complaints bureau investigations into the circumstances of the arrest and prosecution of Mr. Roc Sandford.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No. It is not the practice to publish reports of this kind.

Radio Surveillance Equipment

Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prosecutions have been brought over the last 10 years against those contravening the Wireless Telegraphy Acts by using radio surveillance equipment without a licence;

(2) how many prosecutions have been brought over the last 10 years against those contravening the Telecommunications Acts by using radio surveillance equipment in conjunction with telephone instruments and/or telephone lines without a licence.

Mr. John Patten: It is not possible to distinguish prosecutions for such offences from the records of court proceedings held centrally.

Sports Clubs (Sex Discrimination)

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is yet in a position to report on the Government's response to the Equal Opportunities Commission's paper on sex discrimination in private sports clubs.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Barking (Ms. Richardson) on 14 March at columns 422-23.

Police (Airborne Transport)

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has as to the total cost to police forces in England and Wales of using aeroplanes or other airborne transport, including fuel, maintenance and staff costs, for detecting or apprehending motorists exceeding speed limits over the past 12 months;

(2) what information he has as to which police forces have utilised aeroplanes or any other airborne transport during the past 12 months for the purpose of detecting or apprehending motorists exceeding speed limits, and on how many occasions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: A Home Office-sponsored experiment was carried out by the West Midlands police air support unit in February 1988, over a stretch of the M42, covering the West Midlands and West Mercia force areas, to assess how the presence of a police aircraft on patrol affected motorists' speed and road safety generally. There were three flights over a two-week period, totalling four hours 45 minutes. The experiment was funded by the Home Office and the cost to the forces concerned was limited to the salaries of the police observers. There is no record of other police air support units in England and Wales using aircraft for this purpose during the past 12 months.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what information he has as to which police forces have utilised aeroplanes or any other airborne transport during the past 12 months for the purpose of detecting or clearing up offences of burglary, not connected with terrorism; and on how many occasions;

(2) what information he has as to which police forces have utilised aeroplanes or any other airborne transport during the past 12 months for the purpose of detecting or clearing up offences of theft, not connected with terrorism; and on how many occasions.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The available information is as follows:

(i)	(ii)		(iii)	(iv)	(v)
Police Air Unit[1]	Number of occasions where aircraft called to incidents involving		Number of occasions in (ii) where arrests made	Number of arrests (where information available)	Period Covered
	Burglary	Theft
Devon and Cornwall	—	—	14	—	12 months to May 1988
Hampshire	35	45	10	—	12 months to May 1988
Midlands (comprising West Midlands, Staffordshire, West Mercia and Warwickshire)	7	32	29	94	July 1987 to May 1988
TOTAL	42	77	53	94

[1] Excludes the Metropolitan police and Thames Valley air support units, where information is not kept in the form requested.

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to discuss with chief constables the circumstances in which aeroplanes are used for the purpose of crime detection and prevention; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No, but it is intended to circulate to chief constables later this year:

(i) an information package containing advice and guidance about the use of aircraft for police operations; and

(ii) a report on the cost-effectiveness of the midlands air operation which was set up on a trial basis in 1987.

Police Priorities

Mr. Greg Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the effectiveness in maintaining law and order generally of the relative priority in terms of manpower and resources accorded by different police forces to (a) detecting and preventing crimes of violence and burglary and (b) detecting and apprehending motorists exceeding speed limits; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Chief officers of police determine their objectives and priorities in relation to local circumstances, in consultation, where appropriate, with local police authorities. Her Majesty's inspectors of constabulary report annually on the efficiency and effectiveness of all provincial police forces. Their professional assessment of overall performance takes into account such matters as the extent and nature of policing problems, and the priority given to the prevention and detection of different types of crime.

Arms Cache (Discovery)

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to which police force or forces have carried out inquiries following the discovery of an arms cache in a city in the north of England in 1987; and if he will call for a report from the appropriate chief constables as to the size and nature of the cache, as to the progress of the police inquiries and as to what lines of investigation the police are pursuing concerning the source of the arms, the purpose for which they were intended and any involvement by foreign Governments or their agencies.

Mr. Hurd: My hon. Friend may have in mind a case which is sub judice at present. It would not be right to comment.

NHS Lottery

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department to what extent his Department and the Gaming Board are monitoring the establishment and operation of the privately promoted National Health Service lottery with a view to assessing the implications for Government policy towards the geographical extent of, and size of prizes offered by, lotteries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: The Department and the Gaming Board are taking a close interest in any information about this lottery which is available, because of the promoters' statements that they have found a means within the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976 to offer a first prize considerably in excess of the maximum amount which the law allows for a single lottery. The Gaming Board has recently brought to the notice of the Crown Prosecution Service aspects of the enterprise, to consider whether or not they may be in breach of the 1976 Act.

Accused Persons (Defence)

Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will give details of the further work he proposes on the consequences when an accused person produces at his trial a line of defence which he has not previously mentioned to the police.

Mr. Hurd: As I said on Second Reading of the Criminal Justice Bill on 18 January 1988, at column 687, I started a discussion, beginning with a lecture to the Police Foundation in July, on a recommendation made by the Criminal Law Revision Committee in 1972. This was that the court should be able to draw whatever inferences appeared proper from the accused's failure, when interviewed by the police, to mention facts later relied on in his defence, and such failure should also be able to corroborate other evidence against him.

There has been a lively debate, and I have listened carefully to the arguments for and against change. I am not convinced that the protection which the law now gives to the accused person who ambushes the prosecution can be justified. The case for change is strong. But I am persuaded by some of the comments which have been made that more careful work needs to be done before we can bring forward with confidence a specific proposal for legislation. I do not see the Criminal Justice Bill, which is already long and detailed, as the right vehicle for such a proposal.

The work which needs to be done covers matters such as the precise form of the change in the law which would best achieve our purposes given the significant changes in police and criminal procedure in England and Wales in recent years, and of any warning given by the police to suspects before commencing interviews; the practical implications, both for police interviews and in court; and the relevance of other measures to encourage early disclosure of the defence case. I am asking a small working group under the chairmanship of a senior Home Office official to carry this work forward, and advise me by early next year, with a view to legislation in due course. The group will include a senior police officer, experienced members of both branches of the legal profession and a senior member of the Crown Prosecution Service. Since there will be implications for law and practice in Northern Ireland, I am, with the agreement of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, also arranging for an official from his office to serve on the group.

The members of the working group will be:

Mr. W. J. Bohan
Head of the Criminal Policy Department, Home Office
(Chairman)

Mr. K. R. Ashken
Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Colin Bailey
Assistant Chief Constable (Crime), West Yorkshire Police

Mr. B. A. Blackwell
Northern Ireland Office

Mr. Michael Kalisher QC
Barrister and a Recorder of the Crown Court

Mr. P. M. Raphael
Solicitor

Provincial Police Force Establishments

Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has reached decisions on the applications from police authorities for increase in provincial police force establishments in 1988-89.

Mr. Hurd: I have approved 450 additional posts with effect from 1 June as follows:

Police authority	Posts approved
Avon and Somerset	20
Bedfordshire	10

Police authority	Posts approved
Cambridgeshire	20
Cheshire	15
Devon and Cornwall	25
Essex	20
Gwent	9
Hampshire	23
Kent	30
Norfolk	20
Northamptonshire	20
Northumbria	30
North Wales	10
Nottinghamshire	35
South Yorkshire	20
Staffordshire	10
Thames Valley	40
West Midlands	70
West Yorkshire	23

With the 50 additional police posts previously authorised for Thames Valley with effect from 1 April 1988, I have now approved 500 police posts for provincial forces for 1988-89. This is part of the phased programme of about 2,000 additional posts for provincial forces which I announced in May 1986 and brings to 5,553 the posts approved since 1979.

Residential Care Television Licence Scheme

Mr. Lord: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to the accommodation for residential care television licence scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd: I am today laying amendment regulations, which will come into force from midnight tonight, which set out revised criteria for eligibility for the accommodation for residential care concessionary television licence.

The purpose of the concessionary scheme is to enable pensioners and disabled people who live in residential homes or in sheltered housing provided by a local authority or a housing association to obtain a television licence at a reduced fee. Following a High Court judgment last year it is clear that under the current regulations many people whom the scheme was never intended to benefit would now qualify. The purpose of the new regulations is to reinstate the original intention.

The new regulations therefore define more closely the accommodation which will qualify. In future, in order to qualify for the concessionary licence, the accommodation in question will have to form a group of at least four dwellings, within a common boundary, specially provided by way of erection or conversion only for elderly or disabled people, and provided or run by a local authority or housing association, with a dedicated warden and a common facility for the use of all the occupants.

These amendments will not affect the application of the regulations to residential homes, which will continue to qualify for the concessionary licence if they meet the statutory requirements. However, as a result of changes in the pattern of care for elderly people, I have decided additionally to extend the scope of the concession to nursing homes registered under the relevant legislation. At present, people in such nursing homes who have their own television in their private rooms have to pay the full licence fee. In future, they will be able to enjoy the benefits of the concessionary licence on the same footing as people in residential homes This will remove an anomaly in the present scheme.

The new regulations will apply only to new applications received after today. The position of existing beneficiaries is preserved by a provision in the regulations which will enable them to continue to enjoy the concession. This means that anyone living in accommodation which is now covered by the concessionary licence will continue to have the benefit of that concession for as long as he or she occupies that accommodation. This will include most, if not all, of the outstanding applications made before the new regulations come into force.

I have also decided that the concessionary licence fee should be increased from 5p to £5 per year. The fee has not been increased since it was first introduced in 1969, and is now considerably less than the cost of collecting it. During this period the single pension has increased tenfold. The increase is about the same as that which all other pensioners will pay this year for the standard colour television licence, so the concession will remain a valuable benefit. The additional licence revenue will compensate for the enlargement of the scheme over a period.

We do, of course, recognise that there are many elderly and disabled people who do not live in sheltered accommodation, and who do not always find it easy to pay the television licence fee. I have therefore decided to introduce a pay-as-you-go scheme which will enable everyone to pay for their television licence by instalments. This will be available in 1989. Unlike the present instalment scheme, which requires someone to pay a full year's licence in advance before joining the scheme, it will be possible under the new scheme to get a television licence on payment of the first instalment. The aim is to give the licence payer the widest possible choice of ways of paying for the television licence, and of spreading the cost.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

NHS Lottery

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Attorney-General if he will prosecute the directors of Loto for distributing coupons in connection with a National Health Service lottery which falsely state that the lottery has been registered in accordance with the statutory requirements; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Director of Public Prosecutions has recently received a complaint which alleges that the lottery to which the hon. Gentleman refers contravenes the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976. The Director is considering the matter.

Visas

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Attorney-General what is the length of time it currently takes to complete an appeal against refusal of a visitor's visa from the Indian subcontinent.

The Attorney-General: Statistics about the time taken to complete individual appeals are not available. However, it is estimated that such an appeal would currently take at least seven months to complete, broken down as follows:

(i) from receipt of an appeal at posts in the Indian subcontinent to preparation of the Entry Clearance Officer's explanatory statement and dispatch of papers to the appellate authorities in London: three to six months;

(ii) from receipt in London to dispatch of papers to both parties: up to four weeks;

(iii) from receipt of papers by both parties to issue by each party of a certificate of readiness to proceed: this is in the hands of the parties and times vary from a few weeks to many months;

(iv) from certification of readiness to proceed to hearing date: up to two months, but longer where parties request adjournments;

(v) from hearing date to issue of appeal decision: about two weeks.

Following the transfer of administrative responsibility for the immigration appelate authorities to the Lord Chancellor, the working methods and procedures of the authorities, including the question of time limits, are presently under review.

SCOTLAND

Pre-Five Schemes

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will make further urban programme provision available to assist plans for pre-five schemes.

Mr. Lang: Applications for assistance under the urban programme for pre-five schemes will continue to be considered within the criteria and priorities of the programme, in competition with all other bids for funding at the particular time.

Housing Accommodation

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will compile information on the incidence of overcrowding in housing accommodation in each district and islands area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No. However, the Housing (Scotland) Bill makes an amendment to part VII of the Housing (Scotland) Act 1987 which will again allow local authorities to make surveys of the extent of overcrowding in their areas.

Mortgage Defaults

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will seek to obtain information from building societies and local authorities about the incidence of mortgage defaults in each district and islands area in Scotland, together with information about the causes of this problem and arrangements made for rehousing the people concerned.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No.

Salmon Stocks

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library any scientific evidence which is available to him concerning the effect of legal netting operations on salmon stocks in Scottish rivers; and if he will review the weekly close time for such operations before the start of the 1989 season in the light of such evidence.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: No. The scientific evidence available to the Government reflected the outcome of research and monitoring work on the state of salmon stocks in Scotland and was discussed in the course of the consideration of the weekly close time regulations by the Second Standing Committee on Statutory Instruments on 4 May. The Government have no plans for a further review of the weekly close time for salmon net fishing in Scotland.

Afforestation

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether the Forestry Commission is planning to carry out or commission any surveys to locate areas where further afforestation in Caithness and Sutherland can best be integrated with other interests.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Highlands regional council set up a working party to prepare a land use strategy for Caithness and Sutherland. The Forestry Commission attends the working party as an observer and provides advice based on information the commission currently holds. The commission has no plans to carry out any separate surveys of land use in the area.

Children (Special Educational Needs)

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will issue guidance to health boards on the provision of information to parents of deaf children and all children with special educational needs.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Information to parents is already available from the health professionals who care for their deaf children. The Scottish Home and Health Department issued guidance to health boards in 1982 on the identification, assessment and recording of children with handicap and with special educational needs, and I do not consider that further guidance is required.

Infant Mortality

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the infant mortality rate for Scotland in the latest three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is as follows:

Infant mortality rates, Scotland, 1985-87

	Rate per 1,000 live births
1985	9·4
1986	8·8
[1]1987	8·5

[1] Provisional figure.

Heart and Lung Disease

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the total Scottish population suffered from (a) heart disease and (b) lung disease in the latest three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: This information is not routinely available.

Forestry (Hampshire)

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has about the total value of forestry products from Hampshire for the last five years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The value of timber and Christmas trees removed from Forestry Commission woodlands in Hampshire between 1 April 1983 and 31 March 1988 was approximately £6·9 million.

The value of produce from private woodlands over that period is not known.

Milk Marketing Boards

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he has taken in regard to the three milk marketing boards in Scotland in the light of the Touche Ross study commissioned by the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Foods into the England and Wales Milk Marketing Board's commercial activities.

Mr. Rifkind: My Department has recently completed a study on Scottish Pride Quality Dairy Food, the Scottish Milk Marketing Board's commercial arm. Copies of the report are now available in the Library of the House. Discussions with interested parties on the report's conclusions will now begin. Studies on the other two boards in Scotland will start shortly.

RPI (Error)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what decisions have been taken on the disbursement of money to charitable bodies in Scotland following the error in the retail prices index.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The balance of the funds available for distribution from this source to charities in Scotland is £0·696 million. My right hon. and learned Friend has decided to allocate £0·34 million to Scottish Television's Telethon Trust, health boards and the other bodies mentioned in the table. Discussions will take place with these bodies to agree arrangements for the distribution of these allocations to appropriate charitable purposes at the local level. The remaining £0·355 million will be available for allocation to individual bodies in the relevant fields and within the voluntary sector more widely to groups most likely to contain persons in the relevant categories. These groups will include the elderly, the physically and mentally handicapped and the mentally ill, single parents and children. Projects will be expected to provide some immediate and significant benefit to members of the client group concerned, for example, by increasing mobility or providing ease of access to learning, recreational or leisure opportunities. Voluntary organisations will be advised of the purposes for which grant applications may be made and the procedure to be followed in submitting applications.

Telethon 88	120,000
Health Boards	100,000
Community Trusts	70,000
Unemployed Voluntary Action Fund	50,000
Total	340,000

Road Works (Tenders)

Sir Hector Monro: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what proposals he has to increase the proportion of local authority general road works that is subject to competitive tender.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Following a second survey of road works we have decided, as already proposed, that the threshold above which each individual job of road works is required to be submitted to competition by local authorities under the Local Government, Planning and Land Act 1980 should be reduced from £50,000 to £25,000. We believe that the additional competition will be beneficial in securing better value for money. I shall be laying the necessary regulations to give effect to this change which is to come into operation from 1 July 1988.

Health Boards (Employment Disputes)

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many employment disputes are current between local health boards and the British Medical Association; what is the average time for settlement of such disputes over the past five years; and what is the average cost to the Health Service in locum salaries, ex gratia settlements and administrative costs of such disputes.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The information sought is not available centrally. The hon. Member may wish to address his questions to individual health boards.

Mr. Macdonald: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has any plans to reform the procedures governing disputes between the British Medical Association and local health boards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answer 9 May 1988]: While disciplinary procedures for medical consultants include a right of appeal to the Secretary of State against dismissal, procedures governing disputes between representatives of recognised staff organisations, on the one hand, and health boards, on the other, are matters for local determination. There are no plans at present to review the General Whitley Council agreement setting out the guidance on local disputes procedures, but the council is currently reviewing its agreement on procedures relating to individual employees' grievances with a view to possible changes.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides (Replacements)

80. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will consider allocating substantial governmental incentives for the development of products which lead to the replacement of wide spectrum chemical pesticides with host-specific biological agents.

Mr. MacGregor: The Agriculture Departments and the Department of Education and Science through the research councils already support a good deal of strategic research into alternatives to pesticides including biological methods of control. The development of products is for the industry.

Canary Seed

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the total amount of canary seed imported in the most recent annual period for which figures are available; what tax was charged per ton on these imports; and what proposals the EEC has advanced for adjusting such taxes.

Mr. Donald Thompson: For the calendar year 1987 the total amount of canary seed imported into the United Kingdom was 10,300 tonnes. The import levy payable on this canary seed varied between £15·78 and £45·62 per tonne.

In its price-fixing proposal for 1988-89 the Commission of the European Communities has proposed that this import levy be aligned with that for barley which over the same period varied between £112·48 and £124·63 per tonne.

New Zealand Butter

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether it remains his intention, as stated in the House on 7 June 1984, Official Report, column 430, and 5 July 1981, Official Report, column 452, that imports of New Zealand butter shall not be taken into account by the EEC in determining the United Kingdom's milk production quota.

Mr. Donald Thompson: National reference quantities were based on delivery and sales levels in member states and took no account of imports. That remains the position. I am not aware of any proposals to change this basis.

Council of Ministers

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the outcome of the Council of Agriculture Ministers' meeting on 16 and 17 May in Brussels; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. MacGregor: The Council of Agriculture Ministers met in Brussels on 16-17 May 1988. I represented the United Kingdom.

The Council pursued discussion of the Commission's price proposals for 1988-89, without reaching conclusions, and will resume this discussion at its next meeting.

The Council addressed in particular the need to decide on new terms for charging the cereals coresponsibility levy, to reflect the decisions of the European Council, in southern member states from 1 June since their harvest begins in that month. The Council considered a Commission proposal which included provision for small producers to be exempted from the levy on the basis of present arrangements, which allow national discretion, for one further year, but on the basis of a Community definition thereafter. I and a majority of my colleagues decided that the question of a Community definition needed to be studied further, and the Council came close to unanimous agreement on amending the proposal so as to leave this question open whilst making the arrangements necessary for applying the basic and additional coresponsibility levy in the southern member states from 1 June. Reservations by Denmark and Greece prevented for the time being the unanimity required for this amendment.

In the absence of agreement on prices for the next marketing years the Council took decisions to extend the marketing years for beef and milk by a further month.

The Council adopted an amendment to the new directive on the use of hormones in animals and meat, providing that animals treated for a therapeutic or management purpose and the meat of such animals may be traded within the Community provided the hormone treatment has been withdrawn for a certain period before export or slaughter.

ENVIRONMENT

New Town Assets

2. Mr. Hind: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to meet the chairman of the Commission for the New Towns to discuss the disposal of assets in former new towns by the commission.

Mrs. Roe: I meet the chairman of the Commission for the New Towns regularly to discuss, among other matters, the disposal of assets.

London Docklands Development Corporation

12. Mr. Bevan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money has been spent in total on the London Docklands development corporation; and how much private money has been attracted as a result.

59. Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much money he estimates to have been levered in as a result of public funding given to the London Docklands development corporation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: LDDC received £396 million of Exchequer grant in aid between July 1981 and 31 March 1988. It currently estimates that some £4 billion of private sector investment commitments have been secured over that period.

Pollution Monitoring Equipment

15. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if there has been any funding for pollution monitoring equipment through the inner area programme for 1986-87 and 1987-88; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: My Department's records of projects funded under the urban programme do not reveal any funding of pollution monitoring equipment in the years in question. The urban programme is targeted on helping selected urban authorities to tackle exceptional problems resulting from structural economic and social change.

Urban Development Corporations

16. Mr. Kirkhope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public money in total has been given to the seven urban development corporations created in December 1987.

20. Mr. Bowis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much public funding has been given to the seven urban development corporations set up in December 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: In December 1987 my right hon. Friend announced proposals for three new urban development corporations and the extension of the Black Country development corporation to cover parts of Wolverhampton. The necessary designation order, and an order to designate the Sheffield DC announced in March, have now been laid. Resource allocation will be decided after Parliament has approved the orders.

22. Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has decided who will be chairmen of the seven urban development corporations he set up in December 1987.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to my earlier answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, North-East (Mr. Kirkhope): chairmen-designate have been announced for all four urban development corporations awaiting parliamentary approval.

Local Authority Expenditure

17. Mr. Robert Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to alter the capital receipts limits for local authority expenditure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ridley: No.

Housing Waiting Lists

18. Mr. Sedgemore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total number of families on local authority housing waiting lists for the latest convenient date.

Mrs. Roe: In their 1987 housing investment programme returns, English local authorities reported 1,289,000 households on the waiting lists at April 1987. (Local authorities' criteria for inclusion of names on the waiting lists are not uniform and the frequency of reviewing the lists varies).

Waste Disposal

19. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much special waste is now imported into the United Kingdom; what consultations he has had with waste disposal authorities concerning the revision of the special waste regulations; and what plans he has to introduce new regulations.

Mr. Moynihan: During 1986, 53,000 tonnes of special wastes were imported into the United Kingdom. Figures are not yet available for 1987. It is intended to issue a consultation paper to local authorities and other interested parties on a revision of the special waste regulations later this year. It is also intended that regulations to implement the EC directive on transfrontier shipment of hazardous waste will be laid before the summer recess.

Bed-and-Breakfast Accommodation

21. Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for families in bed and breakfast in England and Wales.

Mr. Ridley: At the end of 1987 about 10,400 households, who had been accepted as homeless by English local authorities, were temporarily in bed-and-breakfast accommodation.

Council House Sales

23. Mr. Eastham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council homes were sold in 1987 (a) to sitting tenants and (b) as empty properties in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: In 1987 91,000 tenants bought their homes from English local authorities and new towns, who also sold 3,200 vacant dwellings. In addition, the London residuary body transferred some 5,500 homes to Thamesmead Town Limited.

For sales in Wales I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Nirex

24. Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last had a meeting with the chairman of Nirex; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Moynihan: I last met the chairman of Nirex on 22 October 1987, when a number of matters relating to Nirex were discussed.

Amusement Arcades

25. Miss Lestor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authority refusals of permission to open amusement arcades have been overturned on appeal by his Department.

Mrs. Roe: Of 304 planning appeals involving amusement arcades decided since January 1984, the earliest date from which such information is available, 203 were allowed.

Carrion Crow (London)

26. Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce the carrion crow population in Greater London.

Mr. Moynihan: None.

Lead-free Petrol

27. Mr. Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the rate of progress in the use of lead-free petrol.

Mr. Moynihan: Before the Budget, the level of use of unleaded petrol was disappointingly low, and my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer therefore increased the duty differential in its favour. Use of the new fuel is increasing, but it is too early to say whether the rate of progress is satisfactory.

70. Ms. Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he envisages the attainment of 10 per cent. supply of unleaded petrol in United Kingdom garages.

Mr. Moynihan: I expect 10 per cent. of United Kingdom garages to be selling unleaded petrol by about the end of this year.

Radioactivity Detection

28. Mr. Hood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the present arrangements for an effective system of radioactivity detection in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moynihan: The existing arrangements for the monitoring of radioactivity in the United Kingdom are set out in an HMSO publication "Monitoring of Radioactivity in the United Kingdom Environment", published earlier this year. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Housing Co-operatives

29. Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the result of his Department's review of policy on housing co-operatives; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: My hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning, will make an announcement about the review shortly.

Dearne Valley

30. Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he will now take to assist the local authorities involved to secure environmental improvements in the Dearne Valley.

Mr. Moynihan: The Department is already assisting the local authorities involved to secure environmental improvements in the area through the provision of derelict land grant and additional support under the urban programme. In addition, European money is being used to provide essential infrastructure, some of which also has environmental benefits.

It is the Department's intention to continue this support and explore with the local authorities new ways of improving the environment of the area. A recent example is the bid for European assistance towards environmental schemes in the Dearne valley which forms part of the measures contained within the integrated operation for the Yorkshire and Humberside steel area.

Olympic Games

31. Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with the appropriate sporting authorities about United Kingdom participation in the Olympic Games.

Mr. Moynihan: None. Participation in the Olympic Games is a matter for the British Olympic Association and the governing bodies of sport.

Dersingham Bypass

32. Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from the Nature Conservancy Council in connection with the A149 Dersingham bypass.

Mr. Moynihan: In February 1987 the Nature Conservancy Council made the Department aware of objections it had made to Norfolk county council (in a letter of 2 February 1987) about the route of the proposed A149 Dersingham bypass through the Dersingham bog (a site of special scientific interest). On 17 March 1987, the director of the Nature Conservancy Council wrote to the Department stressing the conservation importance of the site and the impact on it of road construction and stating his belief that less damage would be caused if a more north-easterly route which did not traverse the bog could be substituted for that approved by Norfolk county council on 19 February 1987. The Department also received a copy of the letter of 19 April 1988 sent by the Nature Conservancy Council to Norfolk county council and letters sent by it on 11 and 12 February 1988 to the Department of Transport setting out its objections to the compulsory purchase and side roads orders relating to the proposed bypass.

Basildon (House Sales)

33. Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to the total number of council and new town commission houses sold in Basildon since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: From April 1979 to December 1987, 1,655 local authority dwellings and 5,754 new town commission dwellings were sold.

Private Estate Development

34. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to give guidance to outer London local planning authorities about the case for modernising their local density and structure plans to take account of the latest trends in private estate development; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: The density of new development is a matter for the borough to decide in the light of local circumstances and taking account of any general guidance. We will consider whether any new general advice on density policies would be appropriate in the Secretary of State's strategic guidance to be issued early next year. The guidance will take account of the advice to be put forward by the London planning advisory committee.

Acid Rain

36. Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the relative degree of acidity of the rain which fell on 27 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The acidity of rainfall on 27 April measured by the national acid rain monitoring network (operated by Warren Spring laboratory on behalf of my Department) ranged from pH 3.33 in East Anglia to pH 5.86 in Northern Ireland. Data for 1986 show that an event as acid as that measured at East Anglia occurred only once in that year. As on this occasion events of high acidity typically follow dry spells.

Housing Defects Act

37. Mr Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether there are any proposals to include any further category of dwelling within the provisions of the Housing Defects Act.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Bradford, West (Mr. Madden) on 20 April at column 490. In addition, we have received local designations in respect of certain properties in Taunton Deane and Wolverhampton, and are currently considering whether these should come into operation.

Chlorofluorocarbons

38. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the reduction in world consumption of chlorofluorocarbons which would be sufficient to prevent further damage to the ozone layer.

Mr. Moynihan: The Montreal protocol requires global consumption of certain chlorofluorocarbons to be halved before the end of the century. When the protocol was signed last September there was scientific consensus that this, together with a freeze on consumption on halons, should be sufficient to prevent significant depletion of the ozone layer. There are provisions for regular review and should new scientific evidence point to the need for stricter measures the protocol can be amended.

46. Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a further statement on his policy concerning the control of production of ozone-depleting chlorofluorocarbons.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Roxburgh and Berwickshire (Mr. Kirkwood) on 31 March at column 720.

House building

39. Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward proposals for a new planning circular relating to house building.

Mr. Waldegrave: Advice on planning issues relating to the supply of land for housing was recently consolidated and restated in planning policy guidance note 3. We intend to consult shortly on a new draft circular stressing the importance of up-to-date local plans as a basis for sound planning decisions.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many houses in England were built before 1919.

Mrs. Roe: It is estimated that in December 1986 5·2 million of the dwellings in England had been built before 1919.

Overdevelopment

40. Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance is given to local authorities on overdevelopment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: County structure plans may give general guidance on densities. It is for district planning authorities to decide what detailed policies on density it is desirable to include in their local plans. Such policies should help authorities in dealing with individual applications. Planning policy guidance note No. 3 ("Land for Housing") emphasises that schemes should be well integrated with the existing pattern of settlement and surrounding land uses and that new housing in towns and villages should be sympathetic in scale and character. Planning policy guidance note No. 7 ("Rural Enterprise and Development") re-emphasises the scope for better layouts, more landscaping and lower densities.

Low-cost Rented Accommodation

41. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any proposals to increase the supply of low-cost rented accommodation for skilled and semi-skilled workers in south-east England.

Mrs. Roe: An overall increase in the supply of rented accommodation is the central objective of our proposals in the Housing Bill. This will increase job mobility.

For 1988-89 we have provided an additional £50 million for Housing Corporation support for housing association schemes for rent and for sale and plan further increases to take the total programme to £850 million by 1990-91. Some 45 per cent. of the corporation's rented programmes are allocated to London and the home counties and the proposals in the Housing Bill will help housing associations attract private finance to provide more homes for rent within the reach of low income groups.

The Local Government Act 1988 includes an explicit power for local authorities to assist in the provision of privately let accommodation, subject to my right hon. Friend's consent. This power could be used to help provide accommodation such as that described by the hon. Member.

Development Corporations (Finance)

42. Mr. Robert G. Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much private money has been attracted to the London Docklands development corporation and Merseyside development corporation as a result of the public finance given them.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Birmingham, Yardley (Mr. Bevan) and for South Hams (Mr. Steen) today.

Nuclear Waste

43. Mrs. Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have adopted a policy of opposing the location of a nuclear waste repository in their area.

Mr. Moynihan: We understand a number of local authorities have responsed to UK Nirex Ltd., expressing their views on the options for a radioactive waste repository outlined in the discussion document "The Way Forward." It will not be known how many are opposed to the location of a repository in their area until after the consultation exercise finishes at the end of May, and until the responses have been analysed by Nirex.

Homelessness

44. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the latest figures for homelessness in (a) England and (b) Wales.

Mrs. Roe: The number of households accepted as homeless by English local authorities appears in table 1 of "Local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the 1985 Housing Act: England—Statistics for the fourth quarter of 1987", which is available in the Library. For Welsh figures I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

55. Mr. Livsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what measures he intends to take to combat the problem of homelessness in rural areas.

Mrs. Roe: The measures in the housing White Paper will increase housing choice generally, including that available in rural areas. We have already announced that the Housing Corporation will aim to double the present level of provision by housing associations in rural areas. After discussion with representatives of rural communities we are considering further action that may be needed.

68. Mr. Caborn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department will publish monthly figures of homelessness in England and Wales.

Mrs. Roe: The information received on local authorities' action under the homelessness provisions of the Housing Act 1985 is provided by English local authorities in quarterly returns: it is not proposed to change the frequency of reporting.

Ms. Mowlam: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide figures for each year between 1979 and 1988 for the estimated number of people homeless in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) Dorset and (c) Bournemouth.

Mrs. Roe: The numbers of households for whom Bournemouth and the other local authorities in Dorset reported accepting responsibility for securing accommodation in the years 1981 to 1986, appear in a table placed in the Library in May 1987. Information for the years 1979 and 1980 is available in "Local Housing Statistics" issues No. 54 (table 14), No. 59 (table 9) and No. 62 (table 13) which are also in the Library.

Total acceptances reported by the authorities in Dorset for 1987 are 845, of which Bournemouth reported 217. Christchurch has not provided returns for the first and fourth quarters and Wimborne made no returns.

Acceptances by all English authorities including estimates for missing returns, are as follows:

	Acceptances
1979	53,110
1980	57,200
1981	62,920
1982	70,010
1983	74,800
1984	78,240
1985	83,550
1986	94,530
1987	105,280

A new reporting system was introduced for non-metropolitan districts from the fourth quarter 1980 and for the other authorities from the third quarter 1982, so that figures are not strictly comparable over the whole period.

For corresponding information for Scotland and Wales, I refer the hon. Member to the respective Secretary of State.

Rotten Row

45. Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will seek to extend Rotten row, Hyde park, over the full perimeter of that park; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Colin Moynihan: We have no plans to extend Rotten row. The idea has been considered from time to time but ruled out on the grounds of high costs for the limited use that would be made of it.

Construction Output

47. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are the most recent set of construction output figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Trippier: Provisional figures of construction output in Great Britain in 1987, in constant 1980 prices, are as follows:

Type of work	£ million
New housing
(i) Public sector	700
(ii) Private sector	3,660
Other new work
(i) Public sector	3,240
(ii) Private Industrial	2,740
(iii) Private Commercial	4,570
All new work	14,910
Housing repair and maintenance	5,200
Other public sector repair and maintenance	2,510
Other private sector repair and maintenance	1,950
All repair and maintenance	9,660
All work	24,560

Total output in 1987 was at its highest level since 1973, and there have now been six successive years of growth. Almost two thirds of the 1987 output was accounted for by work for private sector clients. The volume of output in the private commercial sector reached a new record level in 1987, while private sector housing output was at its highest level since 1973. The continuing high level of new orders placed in recent months supports the generally held view that there is likely to be further growth in construction output in 1988.

National Rivers Authority

49. Mr. O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what procedures he has proposed for regional water authorities to discuss with consumer consultative committees the introduction of the National Rivers Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Consultations with their consumer consultative committees is a matter for the water authorities themselves. Several of the committees responded to the consultation paper on the National Rivers Authority which we published last July.

Rating Reform

50. Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the Government's projection of likely poll tax rates in the Carrick district council and Restormel borough council areas, on the basis of the 1988-89 rates year.

Mr. Howard: I hope to publish illustrative community charges for each local authority area shortly.

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance his Department intends to provide to local authorities about the implementation of the community charge.

Mr. Howard: In November 1987 the Department of the Environment set up an implementation sub-group of the community charge working group to discuss issues arising from the implementation of the community charge. The group comprises officials of the Department of the Environment, the Department of Health and Social Security and the Welsh Office, the Association of Metropolitan Authorities, the Association of District Councils, the Association of County Councils, the London Boroughs Association and the Association of London Authorities.

One of the group's remits is to provide advice to local authority practitioners about matters such as registration for, billing, collection and recovery of the community charge and community charge benefits. It is proposed to do this by means of a series of practice notes covering all aspects of implementation. The first of these notes, entitled "An Introduction to the Community Charge", is being published today and will be sent to local authorities and those other interested bodies who have asked to receive copies. Copies have also been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Lorry Parks

51. Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give guidance to local authorities regarding the handling of planning applications for lorry parks in green belt land.

Mr. Waldegrave: Advice on the handling of all types of planning applications in the green belt is given in my Department's planning policy guidance note 2. A copy is in the Library. In green belt there is a general presumption against development, except for a narrow range of uses which are appropriate to such areas.

Local Authority Property Estates

52. Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to implement the Audit Commission's recommendations on the management of local authority property estates.

Mr. Trippier: Implementation of the Audit Commission's recommendations is primarily a matter for individual local authorities and their auditors. My Department will, however, be monitoring progress closely in consultation with the commission and the local authority associations.

Housing Starts, Leicester

53. Mr. Janner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how many housing starts there were in the public sector in the city of Leicester in the years 1977 and 1987, respectively.

Mrs. Roe: Reported public sector housebuilding starts are published in the quarterly "Local Housing Statistics", which is available in the Library. The figures for 1977 appear in issue 45; in 1987, six starts for housing associations were reported in Leicester.

County Councils

54. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received seeking legislation to reorganise local government by abolishing county councils; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chope: Representations have been received from two associations (the Association of District Councils and the Society of Local Authority Chief Executives), two local authorities, and three members of the public. We said that we have no plans for change; our priorities are to ensure the efficient and economical functioning of local government and its accountability to the public.

Regional Assistance

56. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much financial assistance has been given to the inner city areas under the urban regeneration and urban development schemes in the last six months.

Mr. Trippier: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I have today given to my hon. Friend the Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Hicks).

Council Houses

57. Mr. Flannery: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been built in each year since 1979.

Mrs. Roe: The English local authorities' figures for 1979 to 1986 are given in table 6.1(a) of the annual "Housing and Construction Statistics 1976-1986" and for 1987 in table 1.2(a) of the quarterly "Housing and Construction Statistics Part 1" No. 32; copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Home Improvement Grants

58. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has developed any new proposals concerning home improvement grants.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the consultation paper on home improvement policy issued by my Department on 5 November 1987, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Local Government Finance Bill

60. Mr. Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many people and how many organisations have now made representations to him in favour of the Local Government Finance Bill.

35. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many organisations have now made representations to him concerning the introduction of the community charge in England and Wales.

48. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received on the proposed unified business rate.

Mr. Howard: A summary of the 1,271 responses received by 31 October 1986, when the consultation period on the Green Paper ended, was placed in the Library on 15 December 1986. Since June 1987, my Department has received some 9,300 letters, the majority of which are from private individuals. The letters contain a variety of comments on specific aspects of our proposals, or requests for further information, and for this reason do not readily lend themselves to an analysis of correspondents' views.

Housebuilding (Rural Areas)

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy towards the level of housebuilding in rural areas; and if he will make a statement on proposed changes to home county structure plans providing for the release of additional land.

Mrs. Roe: Provision for housebuilding in rural and other areas is made in structure and local plans, taking into account the likely overall need for housing and the suitability of the proposed ways of meeting those needs. My right hon. Friend has invited Serplan (the South East Regional Planning Conference) to consider the new projections of population and household formation over the next decade and to discuss with him its implications for housing and land supply in the south-east.

Juvenile Crime

Mr. Favell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his latest plans to develop measures within the areas of his responsibility in order to combat juvenile crime.

Mr. Trippier: The Department is funding a number of projects under the urban programme which help to combat juvenile crime. These include workshop training schemes for offenders and ex-offenders, probation day centres, disruptive pupil projects, day centres for unemployed ex-offenders and hostels for ex-offenders. The Department is also funding under the urban programme projects providing facilities for sport, recreation and play which help to develop social and other skills as well as reducing vandalism and juvenile crime.

Ozone Layer

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met his European Economic Community counterparts to discuss measures to protect the ozone layer; and what was the outcome of the discussions.

Mr. Moynihan: I refer to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Hallam (Mr. Patnick) on 24 March at columns 186-87.

Water Supplies (Nitrate Content)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has had with water authorities about the cost of bringing all public water supplies within the 50mg limit of nitrate contents; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Water undertakers have been asked to assess the cost of reducing nitrate concentrations in drinking water below 50mg per litre, and these assessments are now awaited.

Local Authority Services (Tendering)

65. Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on progress towards the implementation by local authorities of competitive tendering for local authority services.

Mr. Chope: With the exception of parish councils—which are being consulted separately—all English local authorities have been informed of my right hon. Friend's decisions on the latest dates by which they must expose their services to competition under the Local Government Act 1988, I welcome the fact that a significant number are seeking tenders earlier than these dates, as this will hasten the delivery of cost savings to ratepayers.

Merseyside Development Corporation

66. Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how much private funding he estimates to have been levered in as a result of public funding of the Merseyside Development Corporation.

Mr. Trippier: Since its inception in 1981 Merseyside development corporation has secured private sector investment totalling £64 million.

Planning Applications

67. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to seek to extend the powers of local planning authorities to refuse applications which are out of scale and character with existing developments in residential areas.

Mr. Waldegrave: Questions of scale and character are material considerations which planning authorities are entitled to take into account in considering applications for development in residential areas. Authorities can also incorporate density policies in local plans where they consider it appropriate to do so. Where they have such policies, they should generally be able to implement them through development control, provided that individual decisions are supported by adequate reasons.

London Bridge City

69. Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received concerning his decision to call in the planning application which relates to phase II of London Bridge city.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department received two representations in respect of the called in applications. These representations were concerned principally with the height, bulk, massing and design of the proposed development and the demolition of the listed building on the site.

Micro-organisms (Release)

71. Mr. Lofthouse: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make it his policy to require public hearings and independent scientific review for each proposed environmental release of genetically engineered micro-organisms in the United Kingdom

74. Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to change United Kingdom regulatory provisions for the control of the release of genetically engineered micro-organisms to the environment.

Mr. Moynihan: The Royal Commission on environmental pollution is currently reviewing the area of release of genetically engineered organisms and expects to report by early next year. The Government will be considering what changes, if any, are required to existing arrangements in the light of this advice. In the meantime the Health and Safety Executive has published a consultative paper on the review of the Health and Safety at Work (Genetic Manipulation) Regulations 1978 which proposes the compulsory notification to the Health and Safety Executive of planned releases to the environment.

Ramsar Sites

72. Mr. Buckley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those areas which have been notified to his Department by the Nature Conservancy Council for designation as Ramsar sites or special protection areas, indicating the date on which each completed proposal was forwarded by the Nature Conservancy Council.

Mr. Moynihan: We are currently considering NCC proposals for the classification of eight sites as special protection areas and/or Ramsar sites. Details are as follows:

Site	Date of submission
1. Orwell/Stour Estuaries	16 January 1986
2. Medway Estuary	1 April 1986
3. Bury Inlet	11 September 1986 (Ramsar) 28 January 1988 (SPA)
4. Mersey Estuary	25 November 1985
5. Benfleet and Southfleet Marshes	27 May 1987
6. North Norfolk Coast	18 November 1987
7. Llyn Idwal	6 May 1987
8. Llyn Tegid	22 April 1987

European Football

73. Mr. John Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions have taken place between Her Majesty's Government and the football authorities in Europe concerning the readmittance of English clubs to European competitions.

Mr. Moynihan: I met the president of UEFA on Saturday 14 May together with the chairman of the Football Association and the president of the Football League.

It was agreed that the decision on the readmittance of English clubs was for UEFA and that it would take it in the light of my report of the domestic season and events during the European championships finals.

Nitrogen Dioxide Levels (London)

75. Ms. Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether nitrogen dioxide levels in central London exceeded World Health Organisation and European Economic Community guidelines in November 1987; and what has been the trend in nitrogen dioxide levels in central London over the last decade.

Mr. Moynihan: The World Health Organisation's recommended guidelines for hourly and daily nitrogen dioxide levels, given in the WHO regional publication "Air Quality Guidelines for Europe", European Series No. 23, were exceeded in central London on 29 and 30 November 1987. The Department has asked the Warren Spring laboratory to examine its records of nitrogen dioxide levels in central London over the last decade. The laboratory reports a slight downward trend in annual means but no discernible trend in peak values.

The European Community directive (85/203/EEC) gives guidelines, expressed not in monthly terms but in terms of the calender year, and results in any individual month cannot be compared with them.

House Price Inflation

76. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any proposals to combat house price inflation.

Mrs. Roe: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Darling) on 4 November at column 736.

Land Use Survey

77. Sir Geoffrey Johnson Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will establish a national land use survey to determine what land is available for housing and other purposes.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has no plans to establish a national land use survey. My Department already monitors and publishes information from the Ordnance Survey on land use changes at national and regional level. Over the last two years 46 per cent. of land developed for housing came from previously developed sites or vacant land within urban areas. To help in preparing and monitoring structure plans, local authorities and housebuilders are strongly encouraged to prepare joint studies of housing land availability in each county.

Thamesmead Estate

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what was the total debt outstanding on the Thamesmead estate after its sale by the London residuary body; and when and to whom he anticipates the debt will be repaid;

(2) which company approached his Department to reduce the price following the valuation of Thamesmead estate for the London residuary body by chartered accountants; and what adjustment was made;

(3) when the valuation was made of Thamesmead estate by the chartered accountants; and what value was assigned;

(4) what price per house was paid for the Thamesmead estate to the London residuary body;

(5) to which company the Thamesmead estate was sold by the London residuary body; and what was the price paid;

(6) what is (a) the total rent income on the Thamesmead estate and (b) the total service charge income; and how much of this will be used to pay the outstanding capital debt owed to the former Greater London council.

Mr. Chope: Accountants were employed by the Government to produce a business plan (not a valuation) which would enable terms to be set for the disposal of the Thamesmead estate to Thamesmead Town Ltd. which would maximise the return to London boroughs while enabling the company to remain viable. For the terms of the sale, I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Planning to the Member for Erith and Crayford (Mr. Evennett) on 20 July 1987, Official Report, column 106. Particulars of rent and service charge income can be obtained from the company. The debt outstanding on abolition of the GLC was £138·8 million which was included in the total of debt for which servicing arrangements by the London boroughs, pro rata to population, were made in the Local Government Reorganisation (Repayment of Loans) (Greater London) Order 1986 (SI 1986/439). The boroughs have however been relieved of an onerous burden and they will receive a share of lettings and of receipts from sales of housing.

Rights of Way

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he takes to ensure that claims for the addition of rights of way to the definitive maps are considered in their historic, geographical and social context and against the background of any old map or other evidence available.

Mr. Moynihan: The role of my right hon. Friend in relation to the addition of rights of way to definitive maps is confined to the determination of opposed orders made by surveying authorities, and appeals against the refusal of applications for such an order. In exercising those responsibilities he is obliged to take into consideration all evidence submitted by the parties insofar as it relates to the existence of the alleged right of way.

Established Use Certificates

Mr. Heddle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to review the established use certificate procedure.

Mr. Waldegrave: In the recent report of an efficiency scrutiny of planning enforcement notice appeals, the repeal of the provisions (in section 94 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1971) for issuing established use certificates, after a prior notice period of two years, is recommended. The report of the efficiency scrutiny, and my Department's action plan in response to it, are about to be published. This recommendation requires further study, and we shall consult interested organisations and professional bodies about the recommendation and its likely consequences.

Tenancies

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how soon after Royal Assent he intends to commence the implementation of (a) the assured tenancy and (b) the assured shorthold tenancy provisions of the Housing Bill.

Mr. Waldegrave: Under clause 115(3) of the Bill these provisions will come into force two months after Royal Assent.

Water Supply

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will bring forward a code of guidance on water disconnections for the water industry to take account of the new social security legislation.

Mr. Moynihan: The water industry has successfully operated a voluntary code of practice on disconnections for some years. I understand that it intends shortly to publish a revised code, reflecting the recent changes in the social security system.

Water Consumption

Mr. Summerson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what the estimated consumption of water was in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Greater London in each of 1958, 1968 and 1978; and what it will be in 1988.

Mr. Moynihan: The estimated quantities of water supplied are as follows:

Average per day in megalitres

Year	Quantity
United Kingdom
1958	11,750
1968	15,300
1978	18,050
1988	[1]19,900
Greater London
1958	1,492
1968	1,687
1978	1,918
1988	[1]2,180

Inner Area Programme

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list schemes covering recycling and energy conservation funded by the inner area programme in 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89; and if he will make a statement regarding the funding of these specific schemes.

Mr. Trippier: A number of schemes to improve energy conservation and to assist the recycling of waste products have been funded by my Department under the urban programme. There are no plans to alter the way applications for funding of such projects are dealt with under the urban programme. I will today be placing in the Library copies of lists for such projects funded in 1986-87 and 1987-88. Similar information for expected funding in 1988-89 is not yet available.

Rent Acts

Mr. Callaghan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many private properties there are for rent outside the control of the Rent Acts in London.

Mr. Ridley: The information is not available.

Rating Reform

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if his Department is making arrangements to assist county and district councils in the introduction of the community charge by the preparation of a standard computer software package, and if his Department will take action to co-ordinate the use of councils' existing hardware systems to reduce the cost of the introduction of the community charge; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: It is for authorities to decide on the computer software they need to administer the community charge. My Department will be issuing practice notes on the community charge which will provide charging authorities and the computing industry with the details they need to design the software required. In addition, the independent firm of Price Waterhouse will be providing a summary of best practices which, if followed by local authorities, should help to reduce their costs.

Fish Disease

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when the Southern water authority carried out its investigation into fish disease at the Weir Wood reservoir; what were its conclusions; and if he will arrange for a copy of the report to be placed in the Library.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 16 May 1988]: I am aware of the matters giving rise to the hon. Gentleman's question. These are being looked into. I will write to him as soon as I can.

Waste Dumping (Bristol Channel)

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many outlets of raw sewage are at present being deposited in the Bristol channel; how often they are monitored; by whom they are monitored; and when any of these outfalls will be extinguished.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 May 1988]: Such information is not held centrally. Water authorities are generally responsible for monitoring and the public registers which they are required to maintain contain details of authorised discharges including details of monitoring results. Increasingly, sewage receives treatment before being discharged to estuaries and coastal waters. A major national programme of schemes for improving bathing waters is under way to replace existing unsatisfactory short outfalls.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment in how many places in the Bristol channel the dumping of raw sewage, sewage sludge, industrial waste, industrial spoil, nuclear waste of other abnormal deposits has been authorised by his Department, directly or in liaison with other Departments.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 May 1988]: No dumping at sea of solid nuclear waste takes place. The Department keeps no records of the locations where any of the other wastes referred to might be dumped in the Bristol channel. Authorisations for the deposit of wastes at sea are given by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food under part II of the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985. I have replied separately on the discharge of liquids to the Bristol channel.

Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what quantities of low level or other nuclear waste are being discharged into the Bristol channel; what is the specification of low level waste; what were the last two dates on which these discharges were monitored; and what were the results.

Mr. Moynihan [holding answer 16 May 1988]: Details of radioactive liquid discharges from nuclear sites are set out in the annual report of the Paris Commission. The latest (November 1987) edition of the report has been placed in the Library of the House. The limits for low-level radioactive waste discharges to the Bristol channel are specified in certificates of authorisation issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1960. All liquid radioactive wastes are monitored prior to discharge. The results are summarised in the annual report of the Paris Commission.

Public Sector (Private Investment)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish in the Official Report (a) the Ryrie rules of 1981 and (b) his recent note to the National Economic Development Council, on the scoring of private investment in the public sector; and if he will make a statement on their applicability to capital investment involving joint ventures between local authorities and the private sector.

Mr. Ridley [holding answer 17 March 1988]: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer placed in the Library of the House in February copies of the paper entitled "Private Finance in Public Expenditure" which was prepared by the Treasury for the civil engineering economic development council and which includes the so-called Ryrie rules as an appendix. The principles set out in that paper relate to the use of private finance in the public sector generally, including local authorities.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nitrogen Dioxide Levels (Leicester)

79. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what research has been carried out, or is being carried out, concerning the effects of nitrogen dioxide on the health of children at levels currently being experienced in Leicester.

Mrs. Currie: We are not aware of any research projects in Leicester. Health effects were extensively reviewed when the limit value for the EC air quality directive for nitrogen dioxide (85/203/EEC) was set, and when the recently published World Health Organisation guidelines were drawn up. Measurements of nitrogen dioxide commissioned by the Department of the Environment indicated that Leicester was unlikely to breach the directive limit value or exceed the WHO guideline. Adverse health effects for even particularly sensitive children or adults are most unlikely, even at the limit value or guideline levels.

Woolwich Office

Mr. Cartwright: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what staffing level was designated for his Department's Woolwich office in the years 1986-87, 1987-88 and 1988-89; how many staff were actually in post on 1 May in each year; and what has been the alteration in work load over the same period.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

	Number
Complement 1986-87	237
Complement 1987-88	279

	Number
Complement 1988-89	247
Staff in post 1 May 1986	221
Staff in post 1 May 1987	236·5
Staff in post 1 May 1988	254·5

Comparable figures are not available for the full range of contributory benefits. The 1987 work load figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Direct comparisons between the numbers of staff and the live load are misleading as work loads vary considerably by type and duration of claim and the action that has to be taken. All these factors vary over time as a result of legislative, policy and procedural changes.

Child Benefit

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services why the letter recently issued to all child benefit recipients inviting them to receive their benefits through a bank lists the advantages, but not the disadvantages, of doing so.

Mr. Scott: Child benefit recipients are sometimes initially concerned about when payment will start, notification of how much has been paid and what happens if the wrong amount is paid. These matters are explained at items 2, 3 and 4 on page 2 of the letter which also makes it quite clear that beneficiaries may continue to receive their benefit by order book if they prefer.

Benefits (Homeless Claimants)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the effect on the income to charitable and voluntary organisations, which assist the homeless, of benefit payments being paid in arrears rather than in advance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The national figures on the benefit income are not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, we are considering representations from a small number of such organisations on the effects of these new arrangements.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider making special arrangements to monitor the level of payments in respect of homeless people made directly from his Department to charitable and voluntary organisations assisting the homeless and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Information on direct payments to landlords is collected centrally, but it is not possible to identify separately those made to voluntary organisations and charities.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what level of payments were made by his Department's local office at Leicester, Norton street, in respect of homeless people to the Leicester night shelter project in April 1987 and in April 1988.

The latest case load counts, based on a 100 per cent. count of all cases in action, and the corresponding figures for previous years are as follows:

	17 December 1985	16 December 1986	17 November 1987
Supplementary benefits live load	18,315	19,136	19,028
Short-term benefits live load	1,898	2,267	2,175

Mr. Portillo: For the period 30 March 1987 to 26 April 1987, £7,316·55 was paid in respect of accommodation charges for people staying in the Leicester night shelter. For the period 28 March 1988 to 26 April 1988, £5,120·70 was paid directly to the night shelter in respect of accommodation charges.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will consider extending the list of priority groups included within the social fund guidance to include all homeless people, with a view to enabling homeless claimants to be considered for crisis loans to pay charges for accommodation in advance of moving into such accommodation; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will consider making special arrangements for the payment of benefit to homeless people and people staying in hostels and board and lodging accommodation generally to enable them to receive payment in advance, rather than in arrears as prescribed in the new regulations introduced on 11 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Applicants for social fund crisis loans are not categorised on the basis of priority groups. Crisis loans may be considered for rent in advance to a private landlord or to secure board and lodging accommodation in the light of the directions and guidance covered in the social fund manual. We have no plans to make payments of income support in advance to these groups.

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will consider extending the practice of making payments in respect of hotel and board and lodging accommodation by means of vouchers payable directly to the providers of such accommodation, rather than to claimants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Payments to a third party, including payments made by voucher, may be made if this is in the claimant's best interest, for example where there is evidence that he is unable to manage his finances. There are no plans to extend these arrangements in respect of other claimants.

Low-income Families

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now publish the low-income families table derived from the family expenditure survey for 1985.

Mr. Portillo: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Hornchurch (Mr. Squire) on 25 April at column 28.

Mobility Allowance Savings Scheme

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how long the mobility allowance savings scheme set up by the mobility allowance unit has been established; how it was publicised; how many mobility allowance recipients are using the scheme; at what rate savings attract interest; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Department does not run a savings scheme for mobility allowance recipients.

Cervical Cancer Screening

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what assessment he has made of the number of extra staff needed to implement a full cervical cancer call and recall system in every district health authority.

Mrs. Currie: Computerised call and recall systems for cervical screening are now operational in every district health authority in England. Much of the work of taking smear tests will be carried out by general practitioners and their staff. The number of any additional staff needed for the screening programme will vary from district to district according to local circumstances. It is a matter for individual health authorities and family practitioner committees to make their own assessment and to ensure that an adequate number of staff is allocated to the programme.

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the backlog in the laboratory examination of cervical cancer smears in Scunthorpe district health authority in each year from 1980.

Mrs Currie: The Department has collected such information centrally only since October 1987. The latest month's return from the Scunthorpe district health authority shows an average reported processing time for cervical smear tests of eight weeks. Departmental guidance states that laboratories should aim to return results to the doctor concerned within one month. I understand the health authority plans to recruit more staff in order to meet that target. The hon. Member may wish to contact the chairman of Scunthorpe health district to ascertain whether information relating to earlier years is available locally.

Heart and Lung Disease

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the total population in England and Wales suffered from (a) heart disease and (b) lung disease in the latest three years for which figures are available.

Mrs. Currie: Data on the total number of people suffering from various stages of heart disease and lung disease are not available.

The nearest available statistics can be found in the most recent "Morbidity Statistics from General Practice" (Third National Study, HMSO 1986), a study of the experiences of 48 general practices, carried out between 1 July 1981 and 30 June 1982. Data relating to hospital records for England only can be found in the "Hospital In-patient Enquiry", for which the latest data year is 1985. Copies of both these publications have been placed in the Library.

Abortion

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) pursuant to his reply of 10 May, Official Report, column 91, how many of the five abortions performed in 1986 under ground 4 in West Cumbria were carried out at or before (a) 18 weeks, (b) 20 weeks, (c) 22 weeks, (d) 24 weeks or (e) after 24 weeks;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 10 May, Official Report, column 91, how many of the 222 abortions performed in 1986 in West Cumbria under all grounds other than ground 4 or ground 5 were carried out at or before (a) 18 weeks, (b) 20 weeks, (c) 22 weeks, (d) 24 weeks, and (e) after 24.

Mr. Newton: Of the 222 abortions performed in 1986 to usual residents of West Cumbria district health authority under all grounds other than ground 4, 221 were carried out at or before 18 weeks' gestation, and 1 at 19 weeks or more gestation.

Further information on the gestation of this latter abortion, and of the five performed under ground 4 cannot be released for reasons of confidentiality.

Nursing Aids

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to extend to patients in private nursing homes the responsibility currently exercised by health authorities for supplying nursing aids free to patients in their own homes or in residential homes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We have no plans to extend to people in private nursing homes the discretionary arrangements under which health authorities supply nursing aids, free of charge, for people living in their own homes or in residential homes. Private nursing homes generally set their fees at a level which will cover the costs of any nursing aids they may need to provide.

Benefits (Appeals)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give the average time taken to complete the appeal process against refusal of benefit for different benefits from his Department's local offices at Chorlton, Rusholme and Sale.

Mr. Portillo: The national administrative statistics for social security appeal tribunals, which are the source for average durations between the lodging of appeals and hearing, are not disaggregated for areas smaller than a social security region.

In north-western region, which includes Chorlton, Rusholme and Sale, for the quarter ending 30 June 1987 (the latest available figures) the average time taken between lodgement and hearing of an appeal for all social security benefits was 20.3 weeks.

Health District Waiting Lists

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has about lengths of waiting lists for each appropriate health district for colposcopy and laser treatment.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not collected centrally.

North-Western Region (Staff)

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has for district health authorities in the north-western region about the number of (a) secretarial staff and (b) ancillary staff as a proportion of all employees.

Mr. Newton: Information held centrally is shown in the table. It is not possible to identify all staff undertaking secretarial duties, therefore "secretarial staff" has been interpreted as "administrative and clerical staff".

Social Fund Budgets

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give details of the date on which the social fund budgets were exhausted during their first month of operation for his Department's local offices in Sale, Rusholme and Chorlton in Manchester.

Mr. Portillo: As I explained in my reply to the hon. Member for Glasgow, Maryhill (Mrs. Fyfe) on 4 March at column 746, local offices do not have fixed monthly budgets but monthly profiles of expected expenditure to assist them in planning their social fund payments. I announced in my reply to the hon. Member for Derby, South (Mrs. Beckett) on 6 May at column 656 that I will provide on a monthly basis data on the operation of the social fund for each local office.

Child Care Act 1980

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply of 9 March, Official Report, column 244, he will provide the information on expenditure under section 1 of the Child Care Act 1980 at constant prices.

Mr. Newton: The figures are given in the table.

Net current expenditure under Section 1 of the Child Care Act 1980 at constant 1986-87 prices using the GDP deflator England

Hearing-impaired Children

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what consideration he has given to the finding of a survey by the National Deaf Children's Society, details of which have been sent to him by the society, that many health authorities are failing to discharge a statutory duty to newly diagnosed hearing-impaired children under the Education Act 1981; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if, arising from the finding of a survey by the National Deaf Children's Society, details of which have been sent to him by the society, that many health authorities are failing to discharge a statutory duty to newly diagnosed hearing-impaired children under the Education Act 1981, he will now issue guidelines drawing the attention of health authorities to their duties under the Act.

Mr. Scott: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply to the right hon. Member for Stoke-on-Trent, South (Mr. Ashley) on 13 May at columns 272-73.

Wound Care Products

Mr. Wood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to make new wound care products available on prescription.

Mr. Newton: In the White Paper "Promoting Better Health" published on 26 November 1987, the Government announced that a new range of wound care products would be made available on prescription. I am pleased to say that two of these new products, Granuflex and Sorbsan dressings, will be available on prescription from 1 July 1988.

Departmental Forms

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what was the cost of providing stationery for the administration of the social fund since April;

(2) what has been the cost to his Department of providing new forms for (a) income support and (b) the social fund since the implementing of the Social Security Act 1986.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 16 May 1988]: The combined costs of printing forms and stationery for supplementary benefits work, income support and the social fund were £4·447 million in 1986-87, £9·169 million in 1987-88 and are estimated to be £6·3 million in 1988-89.

. Information on the separate costs of forms and stationery for income support and the social fund could be made available only at disproportionate cost.

Benefits

Mr. Clay: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish a table showing the numbers of families with children who were in receipt of family income supplement and are now receiving family credit who will (a) gain, (b) lose and (c) experience no change, after allowing for housing costs, in cash terms and structural terms.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 20 April 1988]: Family credit has been put into payment to over 190,000 families who were receiving FIS up to 11 April. All except under 100 families (who have been given transitional cash protection) gain in cash terms from the replacement of FIS (plus the value of free school meals and welfare milk) by family credit. After allowing for housing benefit changes, and on the modelled assumptions (but calculating gains or losses to the nearest penny), around two thirds are likely to be cash gainers overall and around a half to be hypothetical structural gainers in 1988-89. Overall cash losers may be eligible for transitional protection under the recently announced housing benefit arrangements. Details about the methods of calculation were issued last week to supplement the freepost and freeline telephone facilities already in place.

RHAs (Clerical Officers)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the number of clerical officers employed by each regional health authority for each year since 1979 until the latest year for which figures are available, together with the estimated number of clerical officers required by each regional health authority.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 29 February 1988, c. 462]: The figures for each year since 1982 are shown in the table. For the years prior to 1982 information on staff in post by region is not available in a form consistent with the later years.

The same functions are not undertaken in each authority.

National Health Service (Compensation Payments)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now publish the outturn figures for 1986-87 for compensation payments to National Health Service staff in respect of redundancies and early retirement in the manner described in the Government's reply to the first report from the Social Services Committee of Session 1984-85, breaking down the figures to distinguish between competitive tendering and other cases.

Mrs. Currie [pursuant to her reply, 31 March 1988, c. 660]: I regret that the outturn figures supplied for "other cases" under the heading "Total cost including superannuation" were incorrect. The corrected figures are set out in the table.

The outturn figures for 1986-87 are as follows:

	Number of cases	Compensation cost £	Total cost including superannuation £
Competitive tendering
New cases	1,935	3,999,000	8,808,000
Continuing cases	1,479	1,487,000	2,099,000
Other cases
New cases	1,767	6,100,000	22,501,000
Continuing cases	7,790	12,098,000	36,283,000

Infant Mortality

Dr. Moonie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the infant mortality rate in England and Wales in the latest three years for which figures are available.

Mr. Currie: The table shows the infant mortality rates for England and Wales for 1985 to 1987.

Infant, neonatal and postnatal mortality rates, England and Wales, 1985 to 1987

Year	England	Wales	England and Wales
Infant mortality rates[2]

[2] Infant deaths: deaths at ages under one year.
[3] Neonatal deaths: deaths under 28 completed days of life.
[4] Postneonatal deaths: deaths at ages 28 days and over and under one year.
All rates are per 1,000 livebirths.

Births

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will state for each year since 1979 in England and Wales (a) the number of births, (b) the number of live births, (c) the live birth rate, (d) the maternal mortality rate, (e) the perinatal mortality rate, (f) the forceps rate as a percentage of deliveries and (g) the caesarean rate as a percentage of deliveries.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The available information is given in the table. The change in the method of collection of national (England and Wales) hospital data between 1985 and 1987 means that there will be no English data analysed for 1986 and 1987 on mode of delivery. Hospital statistics for Wales from 1982 are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales. The data shown for 1987 are provisional.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Top Tax Rate

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of income taxpayers will benefit from reducing the top rate of tax to 40 per cent.; and what is the revenue effect of this measure.

Mr. Norman Lamont: About 4·5 per cent. of income tax payers will benefit from reducing the top rate of tax to 40 per cent. at a direct revenue cost of £2,070 million in a full year.

Oil Industry

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from the oil industry on the Budget; and whether he will list them in the Official Report.

Mr. Lilley: I and my right hon. Friend have received a number of representations from the oil industry.

Taxation Statistics

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for those tax units on higher marginal rates of tax the number of gainers earning (a) less than £40,000, (b) £40,000 to £50,000, (c) £50,000 to £70,000, (d) £70,000 to £100,000 and (e) over £100,000; and if he will give for each of these categories the total reduction in tax liability resulting from the cut in the higher rates of tax, the basic rate and the changes in personal allowances and tax bands.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The information is given in the table. I regret that reliable estimates for those with income over £100,000 per year are not available as estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes. All estimates are provisional.

Gains made by higher-rate tax units[2] in 1988-89 from changes in income tax allowances, rates and thresholds in 1988 Budget

Total income	Number of higher-rate tax units[1] ('000)	Reduction in tax liability (£ million)	Average[3] reduction in tax liability (£ per annum)
Less than £40,000	980	670	690
£40,000-£50,000	170	290	1,700

[2] Tax units who would have been liable to tax at the higher rates under the 1987-88 tax regime indexed to 1988-89.
[3] Based on unrounded figures.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for the year 1988 (i) the projected tax revenue forgone as a result of the abolition of each of the (a) 60 per cent., (b) 55 per cent., (c) 50 per cent. and (d) 45 per cent. marginal rates of tax assuming indexation of personal allowances and tax bands to inflation only, (ii) the projected reduction in income tax liability of each of the groups of taxpayers in those tax bands following the changes to taxation announced in the budget and (iii) the number of tax units that would have fallen into each category.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1988]: The information is in the tables.

Direct revenue costs in a full year of successively abolishing the higher tax rates above 40p at 1988-89 levels and tax units[1] benefiting compared with 1987-88 tax regime indexed to 1988-89

Tax Liability

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the tax liability in respect of the tax year 1988 of a married man aged 51 with no dependent children who is in receipt for that year of a salary from his employer of £1 million assuming he has a mortgage of £30,000, a BES investment of £40,000, an investment of £810,000 in a new enterprise zone unit trust of which 94 per cent. is attributable to building costs and where 50 per cent. of the purchase price is borrowed in circumstances where guaranteed rent receivable equals the interest outgoing, and who makes a contribution to a retirement annuity scheme amounting to £195,000.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 12 April 1988]: Liability to income tax in 1988-89 would be nil.

Taxation (Harmonisation)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the likely increase or decrease in the consumption of alcohol and tobacco in consequence of the recommendation of the EEC Commission on tax harmonisation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 11 May 1988]: We estimate that consumption of alcoholic beverages would increase by between about 10 and 35 per cent., depending on the beverage; whilst consumption of tobacco products would increase by between about 5 and 20 per cent. depending on the product. The scale of the duty changes envisaged by the Commission is such that these estimates are subject to wide margins of error.

Post Office (Surplus Properties)

Mr. Bright: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the problems which the rules on the external financing limits for nationalised industries cause for the Post Office in disposing of surplus properties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: I have been asked to reply.

The Post Office's plans for disposing of assets as well as its requirements for additional capital are taken into account in the setting of external financing limits.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Non-oil Developing Countries

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing for each of the years from 1973 to 1987, as a total for all non-oil producing developing countries, the current account balance excluding interest payments on external debts and official transfers, and the interest payments on external debt.

Mrs. Chalker: The information requested is as follows:

$ billion

	Current account deficit[1]	Interest payments
1973	5·2	6·7
1974	27·7	9·4
1975	33·8	11·5
1976	21·2	13·4
1977	15·4	15·6
1978	20·9	21·0
1979	29·4	32·2

GCHQ Staff

Mr. Harry Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what period after retirement security clearance is automatically required for former Government Communications Headquarters employees who wish to travel to Communist countries.

Mr. Mellor: The normal period is three years.

Prisoners of War (Compensation)

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Japanese Government seeking compensation for those surviving former British military personnel who were held prisoner by the Japanese during world war 2; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: No. Under the terms of the 1951 treaty of peace with Japan certain sums were made available to the United Kingdom. Article 14 provided for payment of "reparations to the Allied Powers" and article 16 for indemnification of "those members of the armed forces of the Allied Powers who suffered undue hardships while prisoners of war of Japan."
Article 14(b) of the peace treaty waived all reparations claims of the allied powers and their nationals except as otherwise provided in the treaty.

Rainbow Warrior

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will direct Her Majesty's ambassador to the United Nations to place on record United Kingdom disapproval of the French Government's release of Dominique Prieur and Alan Maffart from Hao;
(2) if he will make representations to his French counterpart, following the release of Dominique Prieur and Alan Maffart from Hao.

Mr. Eggar: No. This is a matter for France and New Zealand to resolve.

Entry Clearance Refusals

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will give details of the length of time it currently takes to provide an explanation of the decision to refuse entry clearance at each port within the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Eggar: An applicant refused entry clearance in the Indian sub-continent and elsewhere is given a written "Notice of Refusal" which explains the reasons for refusal, as soon as a decision on the application has been taken.

Anglo-Indian Relations

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indian Government regarding the implications for Anglo-Indian relations of the attacks and intimidation currently being suffered by the Sikh community in some areas of India; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We sympathise with the efforts of the Indian Government to protect innocent people from the attacks and intimidation by Sikh terrorists which so far this year have resulted in over 900 deaths among the Sikh and other communities in Punjab. We co-operate closely with the Indian Government in combating the activities of Sikh extremists.

Punjab

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will arrange for one of his Department's officials to visit the Punjab to view and report back to him on conditions there and on the safety of those persons with relatives and friends in the United Kingdom; what representations he has received with regard to the interests of the constituents of the hon. Member for Hayes and Harlington in this context; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We receive full and regular reports from Her Majesty's high commissioner in New Delhi and his staff. They are regular visitors to the Punjab. The high commissioner last visited Punjab on 26 and 27 April and discussed the situation there with the Governor of Punjab and other prominent figures.
My hon. Friend has made frequent representations with regard to the interest of his constituents in this context.

Sikhs

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Indian Government about the safety of those Sikhs who are, or who have relatives who are, British passport holders; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: None. We look to Governments worldwide to ensure the safety of all United Kingdom nationals whatever their ethnic origin.

Racial Discrimination

Mr. Dicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what criteria he uses in deciding whether, and in what form, to make representations to foreign Governments about racial discrimination suffered by their citizens; if he will specify how these criteria have been applied in the recent conduct of the United Kingdom's relations with (a) South Africa and (b) India; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The criteria used are fully consistent with our own policy, practice and international legal obligations, and distinguish appropriately between countries whose Governments practise policies of racial discrimination and those like India where it is illegal.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Climbing Frames (Safety)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make available grant aid to district councils in Northern Ireland towards the cost of replacing concrete, flagstones or other hard surfaces under climbing frames in public parks as a means of reducing injury to infants and young children when they fall.

Dr. Mawhinney: No. Subject to available resources, the Department of Education may offer grant-aid to district councils on the capital cost of providing public recreational facilities. Grants are not, however, payable towards the cost of ongoing maintenance or adaptations.

EMPLOYMENT

Restart

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to extend the communication service for the deaf to restart interviews and job clubs.

Mr. Lee: There is currently no general provision for communicators to be made available in job clubs, though job clubs have in practice been able to arrange for help to be given with communication in particular cases. The employment service is currently reviewing the needs for special help of job club clients with disabilities.

There are no current plans to extend the communication service for the deaf to restart interviews, but clients with hearing difficulties can usually be helped by other methods.

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide statistics concerning the destination of the long-term unemployed under the restart programme for the period June 1986 to the most recent complete month for which figures are available, for each standard region and for the number of people (a) interviewed, (b) placed on the community programme, (c) placed in job clubs, (d) placed on enterprise allowance, (e) placed on training schemes, (f) placed on restart courses, (g) on voluntary projects programmes and (h) in jobs.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 17 May 1988]: The number of people interviewed under the restart programme in each employment service region and the numbers referred to the various menu items, are shown in the table. We do not know how many of those interviewed ultimately end up in a job or other opportunity as a result of the restart interview.

Communication Service for the Deaf

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to extend the communication service for the deaf to cover disablement resettlement officer interviews.

Mr. Lee: There are no plans at present to extend the communication service for the deaf to cover disablement resettlement officer interviews but clients with hearing difficulties can usually be helped by other methods.

DEFENCE

Faslane Submarine Base

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the latest estimates for increases in (a) cost and (b) time for construction of the Faslane submarine base due to geological faults; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to my Adjournment debate with the hon. Member for Dumbarton (Mr. McFall) on 10 May 1988, columns 292-300.

Trigat Anti-tank Missile

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the proposed contribution of the United Kingdom to the Trigat anti-tank missile system; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The development cost to the United Kingdom of the Trigat anti-tank missile system programmes will be in the order of £300 million at current economic conditions. Subsequent production costs will depend on quantities procured and decisions on this have yet to be taken.

Newquay (Incident)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will establish an inquiry into incidents involving British and American service men in Newquay on 7 May 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The incident referred to concerned a disturbance in a public house. I understand that no charges are being brought by the local police but the commanding officers of each of the units involved will carry out their own investigation into what took place and taking such disciplinary action as may be necessary.

Vanguard Submarines

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what dates he expects to place orders for Vanguard submarines SSBN07 and SSBN08.

Mr. Sainsbury: An invitation to tender for the construction of SSBN07 was issued to VSEL on 15 March, and an order is expected to be placed within the next year. The order for SSBN08 will follow at a later date.

Military Lands Act 1892

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list in chronological order the byelaws made under the Military Lands Act 1892 since May 1979.

Mr. Freeman: Since May 1979 the following byelaws (and amendments to byelaws) have been made under the Military Lands Act 1892:

Trident

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his latest estimate for the cost of the Trident programme; whether the costs for development of the warhead for the Trident missile are included in that figure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sainsbury: The estimate for Trident remains as announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 21 January at column 775. Development costs for the warhead are included in this overall total. It has been the policy of successive Governments not to release more detailed information on such costs for reasons of security.

Greenham Common

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. McNair-Wilson), 29 April, Official Report, columns 310-11 (a) what are his plans for the future use of RAF Greenham Common, (b) what further construction on the base is planned with the exception of those buildings required to comply with the INF treaty and related agreements and (c) whether his Department proposes to remove the legal obstacle referred to in his answer by legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: RAF Greenham Common has been designated as a NATO standby operating base for many years and we envisage that this role will continue after the cruise missiles are withdrawn in three years' time. No decisions have yet been taken on any additional roles for the base thereafter. At present the main proposals for further construction, apart from buildings required for INF inspection purposes, are plans to build a communications mast and to replace outdated accommodation for single airmen. However the Ministry of Defence must retain flexibility over the use of this important base consistent with the normal planning procedures appropriate to Crown land. The decision announced on 29 April to negotiate fair compensation for the legal extinguishment of the rights of common under the provisions of the Defence Act 1954 should ensure this flexibility without recourse to legislation.

Priddy's Hard Armaments Depot

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals his Department has received for the future use of land at the Priddy's Hard armaments depot, Gosport once it has been vacated by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The RNAD Priddy's Hard site will cease to be required for defence purposes early next year. It will then be disposed of against the background of a development brief which is being prepared by the local planning authority, Gosport borough council, with which we are in close consultation. This brief will establish the precise planning requirements for the future use/development of the site.

Copehill Down (Training Village)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of costs for construction of the training village at Copehill Down in Wiltshire; if he will list the contracts that have been (a) agreed and (b) tendered for construction associated with this site; at what stage construction is at present; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The latest estimate of the cost of the training village project at Copehill Down on Salisbury plain is £8·169 million. The main contractor for this work is ARC Construction Ltd. Other tenders for the contract were received from:

Balfour Beatty Ltd.
Cementation Construction Ltd.
M. J. Gleason Group Ltd.
Haymills (Contractors) Ltd.
Higgs and Hill Building Ltd.
The Miller Group Ltd.
A. Monk and Co. plc.
Edmund Nuttall Ltd.

The major sub-contractors are as follows:

Rapid Structures.
N. G. Bailey and Co. Ltd.
Blakedown Landscapes Ltd.
Oxford Asphalt Ltd.
Blackfords Services.

The construction work is about 12 per cent. complete and on present plans it is anticipated the project will finish on schedule late in 1989.

United States Special Operations Forces

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the United States special operations forces units based in the United Kingdom; and which of these are assigned to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation or in support of other units assigned to the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: In addition to the United States air force's 21st special operations squadron at RAF Woodbridge, whose role I set out in my reply to the hon. Member on 29 April at column 307, elements of the United States navy's special warfare unit based at RAF Machrihanish would also undertake certain duties in support of NATO in time of war.

USAF Space Command

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Leyton on 26 April, Official Report, column 152-53, to which unit of the United States air force space command the proposed deep space tracking station will be assigned; if any United Kingdom governmental agency or armed forces unit will have access to information gathered at this site; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The proposed deep space tracking centre at RAF Feltwell will be under the operational control of the United States air force space command wing at Falcon air force station, Colorado. Data from the station will be made available to Her Majesty's Government.

Tornado

Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give a progress report on the sale of Tornado aircraft and equipment by his Department to the kingdom of Saudi Arabia.

Mr. Sainsbury: Good progress continues to be made with the sale of Tornado and other aircraft to Saudi Arabia. Delivery of the first 20 Tornado IDS aircraft, together with associated weapons, equipment and spares, has now been completed, and the majority of PC-9s and Hawks have also been delivered. Development of the associated support facilities in Saudi Arabia is proceeding satisfactorily, as is the training programme for Saudi personnel.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his North Atlantic Treaty Organisation counterparts about battlefield and short-range nuclear weapons.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Edinburgh, East (Mr. Strang) on 23 February at column 165.

Rosyth Dockyard

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what alternative sites have been investigated for the storage of intermediate nuclear waste arising from nuclear submarine refits at Rosyth dockyard.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Nuclear Industry Radioactive Waste Executive is investigating suitable sites for deep disposal of low level and intermediate level radioactive waste. Until a Nirex site is developed and operational the Ministry of Defence must make its own arrangements to store its intermediate level waste. In common with the civil nuclear industry, our practice is to locate the temporary stores in the areas in which the waste originates. Six such sites within the area of the Rosyth naval base and dockyard were investigated.

RAF Leuchars

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums have been spent on the provision of ground facilities for search and rescue operations at RAF Leuchars in the last 10 years for which information is available; what amounts have been provided from sources other than the Treasury; and what were those sources.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. and learned Member to my reply on 13 May 1988 to the hon. Member for Angus, East (Mr. Welsh) at column 262.

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums have been spent on the provision of ground facilities at RAF Leuchars in the last 10 years for which information is available; what amounts have been provided from sources other than the Treasury; and what were those sources.

Mr. Freeman: Over the past nine years RAF Leuchars has undergone a major redevelopment programme to equip the station for its role as a Tornado F3 base. To date some £60 million has been expended on works services, of which approximately £28 million is expected to be contributed by other members of NATO through the NATO infrastructure fund.

Helicopters (Cookstown)

Mr. Hume: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement regarding the damage to local houses due to helicopters taking off and landing at the Ulster Defence Regiment base at Chapel street, Cookstown, detailing the number of householders who have made claims in respect of such damage, the total number of such claims, the date of each claim and the compensation paid in each case.

(2) if he will make a statement regarding the use of the helicopter pad at the Ulster Defence Regiment base at Chapel street, Cookstown, indicating what level of use is regarded as acceptable and reasonable for those living close to the pad; and whether consideration has been given to the acquisition or use of an alternative site.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I am looking into the matters raised by the hon. Member and will write to him as soon as I am in a position to do so.

Nuclear Submarines

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent United Kingdom nuclear submarines can avoid detection through magnetic anomaly; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Royal Navy is aware of the risk of detection of nuclear submarines by magnetic anomaly and takes appropriate countermeasures.

Porton Down

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the destructor unit at the chemical defence establishment Porton Down began operation; and for what purpose.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The destructor unit at the chemical defence establishment Porton Down commenced operation in 1986. Its main purpose is to undertake the safe destruction of toxic wastes and laboratory solvents arising from the CDE research programme. In addition, old chemical agent, dating back to the two world wars, is discovered from time to time around the country. The United Kingdom abandoned its offensive CW capability in the 1950s and these materials are of no military significance but remain potentially dangerous. They are therefore removed to CDE for safe destruction.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consultations he has had with the work force of the royal dockyards concerning commercial management.

Mr. Sainsbury: Throughout the planning for commercial management of the royal dockyards my Department offered the trades unions extensive consultations, which they declined, except for a brief period between November 1986 and February 1987. In addition, the Department issued numerous consultative documents to both the unions and members of the work forces.

Since vesting day, 6 April 1987, the responsibility for consultation has rested with the dockyard contractors.

SCOTLAND

Health Services (Parents)

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he has considered taking steps to improve the links between health services and local authority nurseries so as to offer health screening and health education for parents.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I am not convinced that as presently organised local authority nurseries are the most appropriate places to offer health screening and health education for parents. As I announced last year, we are providing for comprehensive national screening programmes for both breast and cervical cancer.

Rating Reform

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the impact of a uniform business rate in England and Wales in 1990 on Scottish commerce and industry.

Mr. Lang: There is no reliable basis on which such an estimate could be made, since the combined effects of the revaluations due on both sides of the border in 1990, and the introduction of uniform business rates in England and in Wales, are not yet known.

"You and the Community Charge"

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many requests his Department has received from members of the public for copies of the leaflet "You and the Community Charge".

Mr. Lang: A total of 776 requests for copies had been received up to Friday 13 May.

NHS Waiting Lists

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current average waiting time for in-patient treatment in National Health Service hospitals in Scotland.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The mean waiting time for in-patient treatment during 1986, which is the latest year for which figures are available, was 71 days.

Nuclear Waste (Caithness)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what study he has made of the potential dangers of radioactive decommissioning and nuclear waste management in the Caithness area.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: As part of his responsibility for radioactive waste management strategy, my right hon. and learned Friend has full regard to the need to dispose safely of wastes from any decommissioning of nuclear facilities. The studies which have been carried out both in this country and overseas indicate that decommissioning of nuclear facilities can be carried out safely on the basis of existing technology. The radiological problems which decommissioning wastes present in disposal terms are not significantly different from those of other wastes from the nuclear industry.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Allan Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what action he proposes to take in the light of local authorities' budgets and rates for 1988-89; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Malcolm Rifkind [pursuant to his reply, 3 May 1988, c. 383]: I have now completed my consideration of the planned expenditure of district councils. I do not propose to take selective action to reduce the rate of any of these councils.

In order to encourage all authorities with planned overspends to reconsider their budgets in the course of the year, I have decided after consultation with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities that there will be grant penalties for overspending on a tariff starting at zero and rising to 10 per cent. for a 2 per cent. overspend, 60 per cent for a 4 per cent. overspend and 110 per cent. for an overspend of 5 per cent. or more. The rate of increase between each of these points is even (linear). On the basis of planned expenditure the total penalty will be £140 million, the approximate level by which authorities are planning to overspend.

Penalties will subsequently be adjusted in the light of actual expenditure. In 1987-88 many authorities reduced their expenditure in the course of the year and as a result will recover £89 million in grant in respect of that year. I hope the same will happen in 1988-89.

I am laying the necessary rate support grant order today to allow repayments of grant in respect of 1987-88 and to give effect to grant penalties for 1988-89.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Nicaragua

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing in ranked order the per capita contributions made by OECD member countries to Nicaragua for the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is as follows:

Net official development assistance from Development Assistance Committee Donor Countries to Nicaragua in 1986

Donor	Net official development assistance $ million	Per capita $
Norway	11·46	2·750
Sweden	17·54	2·096
Finland	7·13	1·449
Netherlands	19·19	1·318
Denmark	3·22	0·629
Switzerland	3·61	0·550

Donor	Net official development assistance $ million	Per capita $
France	14·11	0·255
Italy	13·70	0·239
Austria	1·28	0·169
Canada	4·32	0·168
Germany	8·00	0·131
Belgium	0·65	0·066
Australia	0·08	0·005
United Kingdom	0·13	0·002
Japan	0·16	0·001

Source: Development Assistance Committee Chairman's Report.

Figures cover members of the Development Assistance Committee of the OECD. No details are available for other OECD countries. The figures reflect bilateral aid. The United Kingdom share of multilateral (mainly European Community) aid in 1985 was of the order of $4 million. Statistics are not available which would show the amounts other Development Assistance Committee donor countries provided to Nicaragua through multilateral channels; nor is the United Kingdom figure for 1986 yet available.

ENERGY

Advanced Gas-cooled Reactors

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if he will request Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Nuclear Installations to review the licensing of advanced gas-cooled reactors;

(2) if he will request Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Nuclear Installations to investigate the problem of advanced gas-cooled reactor fuel assembly vibration and fuel rod fracture potential.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Operators of all AGR stations must comply with the stringent safety requirements of the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate in order to secure consent for continued operation. The licensing of AGRs is the subject of continuous review by the NII.

The NII is fully aware of the present position regarding fuel assembly vibration and fuel rod fracture potential in AGRs and of the further work being done on these issues.

Pressurised Water Reactor (Research and Development)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is the expenditure from 1975 to date on pressurised water reactor research and development by (i) the Central Electricity Generating Board, including direct expenditure and the cost of research and development subcontracted to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, (ii) the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, including direct expenditure and the cost of research and development subcontracted to the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, and (iii) the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority, excluding research and development subcontracted for the Central Electricity Generating Board and Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, and what is the forecast for such expenditure for 1989-92.

Mr. Michael Spicer: The following table sets out expenditure on PWR research and development by the Central Electricity Generating Board, the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and the Department of Energy in the period 1975 up to the end of the financial year 1987-88, and expected expenditure for 1988-89:

	CEGB[1] £ million	HSE(NII)[2] £ million	D(Energy)[3] £ million
Up to 1988	140	7·5	99
1988-89	39	0·5	7

[1] Includes both direct expenditure and the cost of work subcontracted to the UKAEA.

[2] This represents expenditure on PWR safety studies and includes payments to the UKAEA. Expenditure prior to 1980 cannot be separately distinguished and is not included. The expenditure is recoverable from the nuclear site licensee.

[3] This is expenditure with the UKAEA. Expenditure prior to 1977 cannot be separately distinguished and is not included.

Expenditure in future years has not yet been determined.

PRIME MINISTER

Health Service Review

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Prime Minister how many representations she has received about the Health Service review; and if she will break down the representations into categories of sender.

The Prime Minister: I have received a number of such representations, from individual members of the public, those employed in the Health Service and professional bodies of various kinds. These have been forwarded to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services so that he can consider them in the context of the review now under way. Information in the precise form requested is not available.

Turkey

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she had during her visit with the Government of Turkey concerning (a) human rights and (b) the legal proceedings against Dr. Sargin and Mr. Kutlu, and allegations of torture.

The Prime Minister: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Dr. Thomas) on 20 April 1988, at column 435.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she had during her recent visit to Turkey concerning the legal proceedings against Mr. Oz, Mr. Cosku, Mr. Ozdo Jan and 11 others.

The Prime Minister: None.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions she had during her recent visit to Turkey concerning the freedom of opposition and expression and the legal functioning of political parties.

The Prime Minister: These subjects were mentioned in the course of my discussions with Mr. Inonu.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Prime Minister whom she met during her recent visit to Turkey; and which towns she visited.

The Prime Minister: I had talks with President Evren, Prime Minister Ozal, the Social Democrat leader Mr.

Inonu, and the lord mayor of Istanbul Mr. Dalan. I went to Ankara and Istanbul. In both cities I visited a number of projects involving British companies and met those concerned.

Ministers' Engagements

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Prime Minister what advice she gives to Ministers about distinguishing between party political meetings and those they attend in an official capacity.

The Prime Minister: None. Ministers are aware of the distinction and no advice is necessary.

Engagements

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

Mr. Stern: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 19 May.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House I shall be having further meetings later today.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Voluntary Schools

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many times section 14 of the Education Act 1944 has been used; and in what circumstances it is his policy to use section 14 of the Education Act 1944 instead of sections 12 and 13 of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not keep a central record of the number of times section 14 has been used. It is for the governors of voluntary schools, rather than for the Secretary of State, to initiate any action under this section. Sections 12 and 13 of the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 have no bearing on the matter, since they are concerned only with school medical and staff accommodation.

City Technology Colleges

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he intends to apply the minimum standard contained in the Education (School Premises) Regulations 1981 to city technology colleges.

Mrs. Rumbold: City technology colleges, in line with several maintained schools in similar circumstances, are likely to provide rather more generous standards of accommodation than the minima prescribed in the regulations. Among the factors to be taken into account are the proposed curriculum emphasis on technology and science and a ratio of teachers to pupils which is characteristic of secondary schools in urban areas.

Education Reform

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what recent representations he has received or heard about proposals to reorganise or cancel the proposed reorganisation of secondary education in the borough of Trafford.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend has received various communications about the reorganisation proposals published by Trafford local education authority on 21 January 1988. No formal notification that the authority has withdrawn the proposals has so far been received.

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he takes to ensure that he maintains impartiality in considering the merits of proposals by local education authorities to reorganise schools.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend considers on their individual merits all reorganisation proposals which come before him for decision. In so doing he takes careful account both of the arguments put forward by local education authorities in support of their proposals and of the points made by any objectors to the proposals. The general criteria against which my right hon. Friend considers reorganisation proposals are set out in the Department's circular 3/87.

Economic and Social Research Council

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects Professor Peter Hall to take up his appointment as chairman of the Economic and Social Research Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jackson: I have been informed by Professor Hall that he does not now propose to assume the chairmanship of the council.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the role of the chairman of the Economic and Social Research Council in promoting social science research.

Mr. Jackson: The role of the chairman is to pursue, with members of the council, the objects of the ESRC as set out in its charter, and to ensure that its functions are carried out efficiently and effectively.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what steps he is taking to ensure that any disruption caused by the Economic and Social Research Council's move to Swindon will not adversely affect the work of the council as an independent research council.

Mr. Jackson: The detailed arrangements for ESRC's move to Swindon are matters for the council itself. My right hon. Friend has, however, allocated resources to assist the council in meeting the costs arising from relocation.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the members of the Economic and Social Research Council.

Mr. Jackson: The information is as follows:

Acting Chairman and Secretary

Mr. David Stafford

Members

Mr. B. Allison — Chairman and Chief Executive, Business Systems Ltd.

Professor G. Bain — Professor of Industrial Relations, Warwick University

Dr. W. Birch, PhD — Formerly Director, Bristol Polytechnic

Professor J. Blondel — Professor of Political Science, European Univesity Institute, Florence

Professor G. Brown — Professor of Applied Linguistics, University of Essex

Mr. I. C. R. Byatt/Deputy Chief Economic Adviser, HM Treasury.

Mr. A. M. G. Christopher, CBE — General Secretary, Inland Revenue Staff Federation

Sir Hugh Cortazzi, GCMG — Former British Ambassador to Japan, Director Hill-Samuel & Co

Mr. G. Davies—Chief Economist, Goldman Sachs

Professor J. G. Edwards, DM, FRCP, FRCPsych — Professor of Addiction Behaviour University of London Institute of Psychiatry

Sir Christopher Foster—Commercial Adviser to British Telecom Plc

Professor H. Hanham — Vice Chancellor, University of Lancaster

Dr. R. G. L. McCrone, CB, FRSE — Chief Economic Advisor, Industry Department for Scotland

Professor A. Maynard — Director ESRC Centre for Health Economics, York

Dr. J. Metters, FRCOG — Deputy Chief Scientist, Department of Health and Social Security

Professor H. Newby — Professor of Sociology and Director of ESRC Data Archive, University of Essex

Mr. A. Noble—Chairman, British Retail Association

Professor K. Thomas, FBA — President, Corpus Christi College, Oxford

Dr. G. Winfield — Chief Executive, Overseas Division, BOC Group

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether suitable, permanent accommodation has now been acquired to house the Economic and Social Research Council in Swindon.

Mr. Jackson: Accommodation has been found to house ESRC in Swindon from August this year. The council will remain there until the permanent accommodation at Polaris house (alongside the Natural Environment Research Council and the Science and Engineering Research Council) is available in 1990-91.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many members of the administrative staff of the Economic and Social Research Council have so far indicated their willingness to move to Swindon with the Economic and Social Research Council.

Mr. Robert Jackson: Twenty two staff have indicated a willingness to move permanently, and nine to move at least for a period. Others are still considering their position.

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is the current approved establishment of senior adminstrators at the Economic and Social Research Council; how many are currently in post; how many have resigned in the last 12 months; and how many have tendered their resignations in the last 12 months.

Mr. Jackson: The current approved establishment of senior administrators at ESRC is 19; 18 are currently in post; two have resigned in the last 12 months; and three have tendered their resignations (including the two who have resigned).

TRANSPORT

Anti-lock Braking Devices

Mr. Fry: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he has any plans to introduce regulations to require the fitting of anti-lock braking devices to new motor vehicles.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We are preparing draft regulations based on Community directive 88/194/EEC which will require anti-lock braking systems to be fitted to the following new vehicles first registered on or after 1 October 1991:

Towing vehicles over 16 tonnes gross weight;
Trailers over 10 tonnes gross weight;
Coaches over 12 tonnes gross weight.

We have no plans for mandatory anti-lock braking for other categories of vehicle. We do welcome the general increase in their fitment.

M25 Motorway

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the reasons why he has sanctioned the construction of additional lanes on the M25; what are the hours of day at which congestion reaches saturation point on those stretches; and if he will tabulate for a typical 24-hour period on a week day the level of traffic on this section of the motorway, taking the heaviest period as 100.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Fourth lanes in each direction are being provided between junctions 11 and 13 to relieve congestion, particularly during peak hours.

The Department does not normally measure journey times or queue lengths, which vary from day to day according to conditions. Traffic flows on a typical 24-hour week day between junctions 11 and 12 are as follows:—

Hours	Hourly flow	Prop. of peak
1	667	6·64
2	309	3·07
3	238	2·37
4	219	2·18
5	319	3·17
6	897	8·93
7	3,306	32·92
8	8,809	87·74
9	9,298	92·60
10	8,773	87·38
11	8,670	86·35
12	7,361	73·31
13	6,435	64·10
14	6,294	62·68
15	6,672	66·45
16	7,371	73·41
17	8,671	86·36
18	10,040	100·00
19	9,146	91·10
20	5,816	57·92
21	3,328	33·14
22	2,282	22·72
23	1,854	18·46
24	1,521	15·14

Total 24 Hour Flow = 118,300.
Annual Average Daily Flow = 117,900.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the increase in rail traffic between the date of the first drafting of the Channel Tunnel Bill and the latest date for which figures are available on that section of the line to be utilised by Channel tunnel trains (a) between Sevenoaks and Orpington and (b) between Tonbridge and Orpington.

Mr. David Mitchell: I am told by British Rail that information is not available in the form requested. However, the number of morning peak passengers arriving at London terminal stations on BR's south eastern main line outer services, which include services on the sections of route specified by my hon. Friend, increased by 8·3 per cent. between 1986 and 1987. BR estimates that it will rise by a further 3 to 3·5 per cent. between 1987 and 1988.

Settle to Carlisle Railway

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer on the Settle-Carlisle railway line on 16 May, Official Report, columns 677-84, what is the period of time for which British Rail is prepared to guarantee the provision of a substitute bus service.

Mr. David Mitchell: Under the Transport Act 1985 British Rail may not withdraw a subsidised guaranteed bus service without the Secretary of State's consent, so the question of the board's willingness to run such a service does not arise.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer on the Settle-Carlisle railway line on 16 May, Official Report, columns 677-84, what running rights would be available to any private sector operator of the Settle-Carlisle railway into (a) Carlisle, (b) Hellifield, (c) Skipton, (d) Clitheroe or (e) Blackburn; and if such facilities have been discussed with the chairman of British Rail or any other British Rail officials.

Mr. David Mitchell: There are matters to be negotiated in the first instance between British Rail and any prospective private operator.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to his answer on the Settle-Carlisle railway line on 16 May, Official Report, columns 677-84, if he will list the structural liabilities on the Settle-Carlisle route which would be taken over by any private sector operator; whether obligations on 144 miles of lineside fencing would be removed; and what requirements on the provision of services and the retention of railway facilities would fall on any private purchasers.

Mr. David Mitchell: The structural liabilities to be transferred are a matter for negotiation between British Rail and any prospective purchaser of the line. It would be for such an operator to decide what services to offer; there is no statutory power for Ministers of British Rail to impose any obligation in this respect.

Mr. Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State, for Transport, pursuant to his answer on the Settle-Carlisle railway line on 16 May, Official Report, columns 677-684, if his calculations of revenue credited to the Settle-Carlisle railway reflected the diversion of freight services away from the route by British Rail; and whether his estimate of revenue included revenue from diversions of passenger trains in the fiscal year ended 5 April.

Mr. David Mitchell: Decisions on the routeing of freight services are made by British Rail on a commercial basis. There was no case therefore for attributing any revenue to the Settle-Carlisle railway on account of British Rail's previous decisions to use different routes for its freight trains. The cost and revenue implications of using alternatives to the Settle-Carlisle line for the diversion of passenger trains were taken into account when assessing the case for closure.

Bus Doors

Dame Jill Knight: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take to ensure that bus doors are fitted with safety devices which would prevent their closing and the bus moving off while a traveller's arm or leg is trapped in them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: We share my hon. Friend's concern about the safety of bus doors. In February we put proposals for new safety regulations to deal with this problem to the Bus and Coach Council, London Regional Transport and the Society of Motor Manufacturers and Traders.

I shall be meeting representatives of the bus industry on 21 June to discuss points which the Bus and Coach Council and the SMMT have brought to our attention.

Passenger Ships (Stability)

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give details of the United Kingdom's contribution to recent work in the International Maritime Organisation on new stability standards for passenger ships; and if he will relate this work to other work being carried on in his Department on ship stability following the report of the court of formal investigation into the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise.

Mr. Channon: All roll-on/roll-off ferries operating in British waters meet international standards of safety. To enhance the survivability of this type of ship following major collision damage the International Maritime Organisation has, as I told my hon. Friend on 3 March, at columns 651-54, been developing for several years, and with the United Kingdom's support, improved standards for damage stability requirements. A meeting of the IMO's sub-committee on stability and load lines and on fishing vessel safety last August reported on proposals for revised standards; and my Department commissioned a research project to evaluate the impact of the proposed new standards on roll-on/roll-off ferries, which was to be completed before the new proposals were presented to the IMO's maritime safety committee in April.

The results of that work were put to the IMO in a United Kingdom paper, MSC 55/INF.12, which was circulated to all delegations attending the committee. They show that, relative to the standards currently applying to new ships, the proposed standards would bring about a significant improvement in the survivability of new passenger ships after a major collision. Of a representative sample of 10 ships examined, all of which fully meet the standards that were applicable when they were built, two would meet the proposed new standards without design changes. I am placing a copy of the paper in the Library.

The maritime safety committee, with the United Kingdom's support, endorsed the proposals and it is expected that they will be formally adopted in October for inclusion in the international convention on the safety of life at sea for application to new ships to be built after an agreed future date. The United Kingdom will be pressing for an early implementation date.

This work in the IMO was in progress before the loss of the Herald of Free Enterprise, and has not been undertaken in response to any recommendation of the court of formal investigation into that accident. As my hon. Friend knows from the answer I gave him on 3 March, related work being carried out in my Department in response to the recommendations in the report of that court consists of:

(a) an assessment of all United Kingdom roll-on/roll-off ferries built before the last substantial improvement in damage stability requirements came into force in 1980;

(b) a research programme to examine specific ways, through design changes, of reducing the risk of large volumes of water reaching the car deck of a roll-on/roll-off ferry, and to prevent such an event leading to a capsize.

WALES

Valleys Initiative

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the expected date of publication of his valleys initiative.

Mr. Peter Walker: I will be announcing my plans for the valleys when I have completed consultations with a range of authorities and organisations involved in the valleys.

River Rhymney (Pollution)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the pollution of the River Rhymney, Mid Glamorgan, on the morning of 16 May.

Mr. Grist: Welsh Office officials have been advised by the Welsh water authority of the incident in which a small number of fish died. The authority's tracing of the source of the pollution may result in its taking legal action, and in these circumstances it would not be reasonable for me to comment.

Water Quality

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to review the levels of expenditure by the Welsh water authority on the enhancement of water quality; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh water authority sets and reviews periodically the level of expenditure it considers appropriate to each of the functions for which it has responsibility.

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will invite the Welsh water authority to conduct a survey of water quality problems and the provision of sewerage facilities in the Rhymney valley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: In discharging its statutory functions the Welsh water authority monitors the quality of waters and assesses the needs for sewerage facilities throughout its area. In the case of the Rhymney valley, the survey of water quality is undertaken by the south-east division of the Welsh water authority.

Railway Crossings

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what progress there has been on the implementation of the Stott report about railway crossings in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: This is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. He has accepted the recommendations of the Stott report in principle and is discussing their implementation with British Rail.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the installation of automatic-open level crossings fitted with barriers in Wales.

Mr. Peter Walker: None. This is a matter for British Rail in association with the railways inspectorate of the Department of Transport.

EMPLOYMENT

Age Discrimination

Mr. Nicholas Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he plans to introduce a code of practice similar to that of the Institute of Personnel Management aimed at eliminating age discrimination in job recruitment.

Mr. Lee: The Government support the principles set out in the Institute of Personnel Management's code of practice. At the present time we have no plans to introduce an official code of practice, but I am happy to commend the institute's code to all employers.

Textiles

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed on a full-time basis in the textile industries of each of the member countries of the European Community in 1979 and 1986.

Mr. Lee: International comparisons of labour market statistics should be treated with caution as it is difficult to obtain data for different countries on a consistent basis.

The available data, shown in the table, do not cover all European Community countries, are limited to 1979 and 1985 and refer to all employees in the textile industries.

Employees in the textile industries

	1979	1985
Belgium	68,400	60,900
Denmark	15,000	14,500
France	298,500	236,600
Germany	338,900	261,400

Spain	245,800	164,800
United Kingdom	339,000	240,100

ACAS

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Advisory Conciliation and Arbitration Service to discuss the present state of industrial relations in Britain.

Mr. Nicholls: My right hon. Friend has no such plans.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Wray: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what information he has on the percentage of adult unemployment in each of the member countries of the European Community, for each year since 1974.

Mr. Lee: Following are the available total unemployment rates which allow, as far as possible, for differences in national definitions and coverage, in order to conform to the definitions of unemployment according to guidelines of the International Labour Organisation.

DEFENCE

Rosyth Base

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what safety arrangements are being made following the decision to build a new facility to store radioactive waste at Rosyth naval base.

Mr. Sainsbury: The new facility will be designed and constructed to standards set by national legislation on the handling and storage of radioactive materials and will be operated in accordance with nuclear site licence conditions and the requirements of the Nuclear Installations Act 1965.

Scouts (Membership Records)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what purpose his Department keeps records of membership of the Scout movement.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Blyth Valley (Mr. Campbell) on 12 May 1988, at columns 231-32.

Nuclear Weapons (Atmospheric Testing)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will outline Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding the atmospheric testing of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Sainsbury: The United Kingdom is a signatory and depository Government to the 1963 partial test ban treaty prohibiting nuclear weapon tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and under water.

Corsham Bunker Complex

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Ynys Môn of 6 May, Official Report, column 619, why he is unwilling to explain the purpose and functions of his Department's Corsham bunker complex.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information the hon. Member is seeking is classified.

Low Flying

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many representations were received from Scotland relating to low-flying activity by Tornado aircraft from Royal Air Force, Germany during the Salmond trophy competition on 14 October 1987.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 April 1988]: Nine.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the numbers and types of aircraft involved and the areas used for low flying by Royal Air Force aircraft participating in the Salmond trophy competition in each year since 1979; and what proportion of the low flying during the Salmond trophy competition in each year was conducted during the period between sunset plus 30 minutes and sunrise minus 30 minutes.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The exercise referred to as the Salmond trophy is one of the RAF's annual navigational and bombing exercises for RAF Germany squadrons. The exercise has taken place only in 1979, 1986 and 1987. The information requested is as follows:

Salmond Trophy

Year and number of aircraft	Types of aircraft	Areas used for low flying	Proportion of low flying during night
			Per cent.
1979
not available	Harriers, Jaguars, Buccaneers	Federal Republic of Germany	No night flying 1986
24	Tornado	Federal Republic of Germany, United Kingdom and Danish coastal waters	[1]27
1987
24	Tornado	Federal Republic of Germany and United Kingdom	[1]27

[1] All between 7.30 pm and 9.30 pm.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if there are any plans to commence night low-level flying by Hercules aircraft in the Scottish Highlands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 April 1988]: Hercules aircraft are already permitted to carry out low-level flying at night in the Scottish Highlands.

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what aircraft types, and from which air forces, are currently permitted to conduct night low-level terrain following instrument flying in the north-west Scotland tactical training area.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 April 1988]: I assume the hon. Member is referring to the Highlands restricted area, in which low-flying training using terrain-following radar takes place. RAF Tornado and Hercules aircraft and USAF F-111 and USAFE C-130 aircraft are currently permitted to carry out such training, both during the day and at night.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the functions and activities of the military low-flying management group.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 26 April 1988]: The military low-flying management group is a Ministry of Defence group which, acting within established policy guidelines, is responsible for the day-to-day management and operation of the United Kingdom military low-flying system.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the bodies represented on the military low-flying management group.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 May 1988]: No outside bodies are represented on the military low-flying management group.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of the land area of England is included within the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 5 May 1988]: The whole of the land area of England is included within the United Kingdom low-flying system.

Helicopter Proving Flights

Mrs. Margaret Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the proving flights undertaken in the Scottish Highlands in late February by a Gazelle helicopter from Royal Air Force, Shawbury.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 21 April 1988]: The Gazelle helicopter in question is currently on loan to RAF Odiham and was deployed during late February on low level reconnaissance flights in the Highlands to check for obstacles on flight paths to be used later by Hercules aircraft flying in the dark.

Army Store, Donnington (Fire)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to what extent the buildings destroyed in the fire in the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation store at Donnington on 25 April were protected by sprinklers.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 May 1988]: Sprinklers were not installed in the building destroyed by fire at COD Donnington on 25 April.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the recommendations made by the Army board of inquiry after the fire at a 10-acre Army store at Donnington on 24 June 1983 indicating (a) those which were put into effect, (b) those not acted upon and (c) the reason why no action was taken in those cases.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The board of inquiry recommended that the water supplies for fire fighting at COD Donnington should be enhanced; depot fire orders should be reviewed; the use of polypropylene strapping should be reviewed; constant checks to enforce discipline and ensure compliance with regulations should be applied; hose reels should be installed inside high-rise storage sheds in addition to hand extinguishers; fire advice should be obtained at the initial planning stages for the provision of storage facilities either in new buildings or by new methods in existing buildings; feasibility studies into the provision of compartmentation, sprinkler and detection systems should be carried out before decisions were made about the replacement of building B6; Army fire service personnel should be given guidance and training on fighting fires in high storage buildings; certain measures in respect of the security arrangements at COD Donnington should be taken; in any future similar investigation decisions which may affect the disciplinary process of either military personnel or civilian staff should be taken by the appropriate senior military officer; the storage arrangements for stores which could represent a health hazard should be examined by appropriately trained depot safety officers; and that a record should be made of those who might have encountered a health hazard connected with the fire. All these recommendations were acted upon.

Equipment Stores (Fire Prevention Review)

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the main recommendations of the review of fire prevention methods for equipment stores and of storage policy for all three services he announced he had set in hand on 4 July 1983 indicating (a) those recommendations put into effect, (b) those not acted upon and (c) the reason in those cases why no action was taken.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The 1983 review identified a number of possible ways of reducing the risk of heavy loss by fire in MOD equipment stores, including, where feasible, dispersal of the more valuable stocks and compartmentation of storage buildings. The use of advanced detection and suppression systems was also identified but it was recognised that their value would be limited in buildings stacked intensively with high racking.

In some cases these and other measures have been adopted as appropriate, having regard to local needs and conditions at individual sites, and in others they are in the course of introduction.

Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence why the recommendations of review of fire prevention methods for equipment stores and of storage policy for all three services he announced he had set in hand on 4 July 1983 recommending sprinkler protection for critical Army stores were not put in hand.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 May 1988]: The tri-service review referred to did not recommend sprinkler protection for critical Army stores. It concluded that the methods of protection of stocks from fire needed to be considered on a site-by-site basis. Each service department reassessed its arrangements for the fire protection of high value and operationally essential stores on this basis. The Army department formulated, and is putting into effect, plans for the segregation and protection of stocks according to its replacement lead time which include the installation of sprinklers in some buildings.

Firearms

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what dates and for what muzzle energy and calibres of firearms his Department granted amended range safety certificates for ranges at (a) Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon (b) Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company, (c) Berkshire Downs rifle and pistol club and (d) Lambourn Valley gun club;

(2) why the Berkshire Downs rifle and pistol club was issued with a firearms ranges safety certificate on 9 May 1986 by his Department.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 9 May 1988]: When invited to do so, the MOD will inspect the ranges of civilian shooting clubs which are affiliated to the NRA or NSRA. Range safety certificates when issued certify only that at the time of inspection a range conforms as regards the structural arrangments to the safety rules of MOD ranges of similar character.

Dunmore shooting centre, Abingdon was issued with a range safety certificate for the firing of weapons with a maximum muzzle energy of 1,313 ft/lbs. I refer the hon. Member to my reply on 20 April, at column 501, for the information concerning the calibre of weapons and date of certificate. I regret the Berkshire Downs Firearms and Ballistics Company was said to have received a range safety certificate in that reply; my Department has not in fact issued a range safety certificate for this organisation.

A range safety certificate was issued, however, to the Berkshire Downs rifle and pistol club on 9 May 1986. The club was affiliated to the National Rifle Association, which requested an MOD inspection. The certificate was returned when the club closed and was re-issued on 11 May 1987 when it reopened as the Lambourn Valley gun club. The certificate covered the firing of 0·455in centrefire pistol and rimfire rifle with a maximum muzzle energy of 475 ft/lbs.

Ammunition Stores (Fire Alarms)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the number of buildings that are used by his Department for storage of ammunition or explosives that have no automatic fire alarm; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 12 May 1988]: It is not our general practice to install automatic fire alarms in explosives storage buildings as these are built and maintained to standards which ensure the lowest possible risk. Automatic fire alarms are not required under explosives regulations or the Health and Safety at Work etc Act 1974. Such buildings are, however, usually served by manual fire alarms to warn employees of any incident.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Sunday Sport

15. Mr. Holt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last reviewed the effectiveness of the Sunday Observance Act 1780 in relation to spectator sporting events on Sundays.

Mr. John Patten: We are not aware of any widespread demand for a review of the effects of the Act on spectator sports in general and have not undertaken one. The issues, however, have received close parliamentary consideration in the context of the Sunday Sports Bills now before the House.

25. Mr. Soames: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with the racing authorities about the introduction of Sunday racing.

Mr. John Patten: Our discussions have been reflected in the measure of general support which we have expressed for the two Sunday Sports Bills which are at present before the House. It does not seem to us unreasonable for the racing authorities to want to hold races on Sundays and to make provision to avoid illegal betting. Equally, we have made clear our respect for the position of those who wish to retain the traditional pattern of Sundays.

43. Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the number of convictions which have been brought under the Sunday Observance Act 1780 in the last five years in respect of spectator sporting events on Sundays.

Mr. John Patten: The information available to me, which may be incomplete, shows no prosecutions relating to sporting events under the Sunday Observance Act 1780 for the years 1982 to 1986.

Immigration

16. Dr. Reid: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now recruit more staff at Lunar house to cope with immigration cases; and if he will make a statement.

26. Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now recruit more staff at Lunar house to cope with the present immigration work load; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: Vigorous steps are being taken to recruit some 100 additional staff for the immigration and nationality department at Lunar house during the current financial year. In addition, we are planning to recruit more than 100 further staff outside London to deal with the influx of citizenship applications.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the total number of passengers granted temporary admission in (a) 1986 and (b) 1987 subsequently absconded.

Mr. Renton: In all, 1,161 passengers absconded in 1986 and 821 in 1987. Separate figures are not available, but the great majority would have been on temporary admission.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were detained overnight during 1987 in (a) Harmondsworth detention centre, (b) Queen's building, Heathrow and (c) the Beehive, Gatwick;

(2) what was the total number of passengers detained overnight under Immigration Act powers during 1987, by nationality.

Mr. Renton: The tables give the numbers of passengers whose detention spanned at least one night pending a decision on their admission to or their removal from the United Kingdom.

[1] Excluding illegal entrants and deportees.
[2] Provisional. The figures include a small element of double counting when a passenger is detained at more than one location.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the total number of persons treated as illegal entrants in 1987, who were granted temporary admission, subsequently absconded.

Mr. Renton: A total of 924 illegal entrants were granted temporary release, in 1987 pending completion of their cases. Of these, 50 failed to comply with the terms attached and were subsequently recorded as absconders.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people detained under Immigration Act powers applied to the Home Office to be allowed to depart voluntarily under the supervised departure provisions of paragraph 156 of the immigration rules during 1987.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the information in the form requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, in 1987 63 persons used the supervised departure provision in paragraph 156 of the immigration rules.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were recommended for deportation with no custodial sentence during 1987; and in how many such cases the courts directed release (a) subject to conditions, and (b) without conditions.

Mr. Renton: During 1987 a total of 352 persons were recommended for deportation by the courts with no custodial sentence. The courts directed release subject to restrictions in 52 cases and without restrictions in 135 cases.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were received into Prison Department establishments under Immigration Act powers during 1987, by individual prison establishment.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information for 1987 is not yet available. The latest information is given in the table.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average length of time spent in Prison Department establishments for persons detained under Immigration Act powers during 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Information for 1987 is not yet available. The average period of detention in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales of persons initially received under the Immigration Act 1971 powers who were discharged in 1986 was about four weeks.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average daily population of persons detained in Prison Department establishments under Immigration Act powers during 1987.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: In 1987 the average population of persons detained under the Immigration Act 1971 in Prison Department establishments in England and Wales was 167.

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons were detained under Immigration Act powers for a period of more than two months on completion of a custodial sentence during 1987.

Mr. Renton: Forty-one, excluding deportation cases who served a custodial sentence of seven days or less, about whom information is not readily available.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give, for each year since 1979, the number of children removed from the country, under the terms of the Immigration Acts; and how many of these had representations made on their behalf by right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Renton: Comprehensive information is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will give, for each year since 1979, the number of stops requested by hon. Members under the Immigration Act which were refused;

(2) if he will give, for each year since 1979, the number of people represented by hon. Members who were refused entry and subsequently made voluntary departures, under the terms of the Immigration Act;

(3) how many persons, for each year since 1979, who were deported under the current immigration laws had representations made on their behalf by right hon. and hon. Members.

Mr. Renton: I regret that the information requested is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many persons of Turkish or Kurdish origin were detained between 21 March and 5 May at Harmondsworth detention centre.

Mr. Renton: A total of 161 Turkish nationals were detained at Harmondsworth between the dates given. Records do not distinguish ethnic origin.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many children were detained at (a) Harmondsworth and (b) other detention centres, over the past year.

Mr. Renton: During the 12 months ended 30 April 1988 the numbers of persons under the age of 18 detained in the main immigration service detention centres were as follows:

	Number
Harmondsworth	222
The Beehive, Gatwick	163
Queen's Building, Heathrow	43

Note: Some people may have been detained in more than one location.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many immigration officers and other persons for whom his Department is responsible escorted the 19 people alleged to be of Kurdish or Turkish origin back to Turkey on 5 May.

Mr. Renton: Twenty-five officers of the Metropolitan police escorted the group. They were also accompanied by two members of the immigration service, an interpreter engaged for the occasion and a doctor engaged by the airline.

Sunday Trading

17. Mr. Stern: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to bring forward plans for the deregulation of Sunday trading.

Mr. Renton: As is well known, the Government continue to favour complete deregulation of Sunday trading hours. They are, nevertheless, prepared to consider any practicable compromise short of this if and when a consensus can be achieved.

Summer Time

18. Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in discussing summer time arrangements in the European Economic Community since the debate on 28 April; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Discussions with other member states of the European Community are not expected to take place until later in the summer, when a proposal for a directive on summer time arrangements for 1990 onwards will be tabled by the European Commission.

Nationality Applications

19. Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about the arrangements for processing British citizenship applications.

Mr. Renton: I have received a number of representations about the time taken to acknowledge applications for registration submitted before 31 December 1987, and about the time taken to consider citizenship applications generally. These delays are very much regretted, but we are dealing with this formidable task in the manner I described earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) and the hon. Member for Wolverhampton South-East (Mr. Turner).

37. Ms. Primarolo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to deal with the backlog of applications for British citizenship.

40. Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of applications for British nationality still being processed by Lunar house.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Members to the reply I gave earlier to the questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (Mr. Hanley) and the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, South-East (Mr. Turner).

55. Mr. Nellist: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to acknowledge the applications made before 31 December 1987 for registration as a British citizen; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: All such applications have now been acknowledged.

IBA (Chairman)

20. Mr. Grocott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has any plans to meet the chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority to discuss future arrangements for television franchises.

Mr. Hurd: I meet the chairman of the IBA from time to time to discuss a wide range of broadcasting issues.

44. Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has yet reached a decision on the reappointment of the present chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

54. Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his intention to reappoint the present chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

59. Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his intention to reappoint the present chairman of the Independent Broadcasting Authority.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to a question from the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Battle) on 16 May, at column 310.

Drug Abuse

21. Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent assessment he has made of the efficacy of Government measures to combat the abuse of drugs.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The ministerial group on the misuse of drugs co-ordinates and monitors the Government's strategy against drug misuse. When the group last met on 4 May it took note of, amongst other things, the generally encouraging findings of an independent evaluation of the 1987-88 prevention campaign. As chairman of the group, I have made a number of visits to see how different aspects of the strategy are implemented. Most recently I visited the Metropolitan police central and No. 2 area drugs squads and St. Mary's hospital, Paddington drug dependency unit. I was impressed by all the excellent work being done.

51. Mr. Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on his initiatives to tackle drugs misuse and abuse.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I refer my hon. Friend to the replies I gave to questions from my hon. Friend the Member for Derbyshire, West (Mr. McLoughlin) on 21 April 1988, at column 517, and from the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 3 May 1988, at column 428.

Criminal Cases (Right to Silence)

22. Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to seek to alter the present right to silence of suspects and defendants in criminal cases.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lancashire, West (Mr. Hind) yesterday.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

23. Mr. Cash: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the recent trend in the number of prisoners held in police cells.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The numbers in police cells rose to a peak of 1,575 in early March. Since then, both the temporary camps which my right hon. Friend announced on 30 March have been brought into operation; and the numbers had fallen to 905 yesterday.

Young People (Custody)

24. Mr. Baldry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a further statement on recent initiatives aimed at providing alternatives for custody for young people.

Mr. John Patten: Our thinking on alternatives to custody for young people will be reflected in the proposals on punishment in the community for offenders over 17 which we are continuing to develop and will publish later this year.

Drug Traffickers

27. Mr. Andrew MacKay: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has about the implementation of measures to confiscate the assets of convicted drug traffickers.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: During the first year of operation of the Drug Trafficking Offences Act 1986 the High Court made over 150 restraint or charging orders freezing some £7 million of suspected drug traffickers' assets; and some substantial sums have been confiscated by the Crown court, including £452,000 in one case in January 1988. The national drugs intelligence unit now co-ordinates all intelligence about the financial activity of suspected drug traffickers. We recently signed an agreement with the United States for co-operation in the tracing, freezing and confiscation of the proceeds of drug trafficking, and we expect to conclude further such agreements this year.

Myra Hindley

28. Mr. Dickens: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give permission for hypnosis to be used on Myra Hindley to assist the Great Manchester police in their search for the grave of Keith Bennett.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are not persuaded that hypnosis of Myra Hindley is likely to produce information which would be of material assistance in the search for the grave of Keith Bennett.

Police (Establishment)

29. Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the outstanding applications for increases in establishment that he has received from police authorities in England and Wales.

39. Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the police authorities in England and Wales which have recently applied to him for an increase in establishment, showing how many of these applications are still outstanding.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is as follows:

1988-89

Police Authority	Number of posts applied for	Number of posts approved with effect from 1 June 1988

[1] Excluding posts for Stansted airport.
[2] Includes 50 already announced with effect from 1 April 1988.

42. Mr. Cran: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give urgent consideration to approving the request for a variation in the authorised establishment of Humberside police force.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr right hon. Friend was unable to give the Humberside police authority's application for 41 additional police posts priority over other applications in the allocation of the 450 additional posts available for 1988-89. The police authority has been informed that its application will be reconsidered when my right hon. Friend next takes decisions on the allocation of police manpower.

50. Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received about an increase in the police establishment of the Hampshire and Isle of Wight constabulary.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received representations from the Police Authority and from hon. Members whose constituencies lie within the force area. The police authority applied for 23 police posts in 1987-88. This bid has been met in full with effect from 1 June 1988. A further application for 47 posts has recently been received and this will be considered together with applications received from other police authorities when my right hon. Friend next takes decisions on the allocation of police manpower.

Birmingham Pub Bombings

30. Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made by the Commissioner of the City of London police in the inquiry into alleged contacts between Dr. Frank Skuse and former Superintendent George Reade while they were both witnesses at the appeal hearing of the men convicted of the Birmingham pub bombings.

Mr. John Patten: I understand from the Commissioner of Police for the City of London that a report has been sent to the Director of Public Prosecutions, at whose request the inquiries were made.

Identity Cards

31. Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he has had with his counterparts of the Trevi Group and other countries about their experience of the universal issue of identity cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The issue of identity cards has not been discussed with Ministers of other countries either within the Trevi Group or otherwise.

Police (Leicestershire)

32. Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any recent representations concerning the request by the chief constable of Leicestershire for more police officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Yes. My right hon. Friend has carefully considered the Leicestershire police authority's application for additional manpower but was unable to allocate for the authority any of the 450 posts available for 1988-89. The police authority has been informed that its application will be considered again, together with others, when my right hon. Friend next takes decisions on the allocation of police manpower.

Broadcasting Standards Council

33. Mr. Patchett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has yet decided on the terms of reference for the new Broadcasting Standards Council.

41. Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the proposed terms of reference for the new Broadcasting Standards Council.

Mr. Renton: I would refer the hon. Members to my right hon. Friend's statement to the House on 16 May, at columns 685-86.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what will be the salary of Sir William Rees-Mogg as the chairman designate of the Broadcasting Standards Council; and what hours he will be expected to work.

Mr. Renton: Sir William's salary as chairman will be £30,000 a year on the basis of a three-day week, but a current review of this and other broadcasting appointments may lead to an increase.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many members are likely to be appointed to the Broadcasting Standards Council; what will be the period of appointment; and when the next appointment announcements will be made.

Mr. Renton: My right hon. Friend will announce the names and periods of appointment of the members of the Broadcasting Standards Council as soon as possible.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what qualities will be taken into consideration when making appointments to the proposed Broadcasting Standards Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: We shall be seeking candidates whose personal qualities and experience will enable them to contribute to the successful establishment and operation of the council.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the anticipated annual cost in the first five years of the Broadcasting Standards Council.

Mr. Renton: We envisage that the Broadcasting Standards Council may require a budget of around £1 million a year, but this financial provision will be reviewed in the light of experience as the work of the council develops.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his oral answer to the hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe of 16 May, Official Report, column 688, what steps he has taken, or will be taking, to ensure that the proposed Broadcasting Standards Council will not conflict with the existing role of the British Broadcasting Corporation's governors and that of the members of the Independent Broadcasting Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The role of the governors of the BBC, as defined in the corporation's royal charter, licence and agreement, and the role of the members of the IBA, as defined in the Broadcasting Act 1981, are quite distinct from the functions of the Broadcasting Standards Council as announced on 16 May. The broadcasting authorities will continue to have responsibility for programme standards and will be expected to exercise judgment in these matters.

Police Forensic Science Department

34. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to privatise the police forensic science department.

58. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to privatise the present police forensic science department.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have no present plans to do so.

Official Secrets Act

35. Mrs. Mahon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he now expects to make a statement on his proposals for the reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act.

Mr. John Patten: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to the question from the hon. Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn).

Ms. Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now make a statement on his proposals for the reform of the Official Secrets Acts.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend hopes to lay before Parliament next month a White Paper setting out the Government's proposals for the reform of section 2 of the Official Secrets Act 1911.

Charity Law

36. Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received seeking reform of the charities laws.

Mr. John Patten: We have received a number of representations seeking reform of charity law along the lines recommended by the Woodfield report. We have also received representations for a change in the law on charitable status.

Prison Building

38. Mr. Devlin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans his Department has to build prisons in the northern region.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Following last year's public expenditure survey, the prison building programme contained 26 new prisons. Seven are planned for the Prison Department's northern region: four in Lancashire (Garth, Lancaster Farms, Rochdale and Buckley Hall), two in Yorkshire (Lindholme II and Doncaster) and, one in Cheshire (Thorn Cross). One in Humberside (Full Sutton) was officially opened last month. In addition, there are four prisons in the programme for which sites have not yet been chosen. One of these may be allocated to the northern region for a local prison in the north-east.

Credit Betting

45. Mr. Andrew Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the volume of credit betting which takes place on Sundays.

Mr. John Patten: None.

Horserace Totalisator Board

46. Mr. William Powell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the chairman of the Horserace Totalisator Board; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. John Patten: The last formal occasion on which my right hon. Friend met the chairman was on 8 March at the tote annual luncheon. They discussed matters of interest to the board and the Sunday Sports Bill, which the chairman had guided through another place.

Race Relations

47. Mr. Marlow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the annual cost to his Department of race relations policies, including the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. John Patten: Lead responsibility for race relations policy rests within the Home Office with the equal opportunities and general department. In 1987-88 the total cost, including staff costs, allocated out of Home Office expenditure to these policies was £11·6 million. Of this, £10·8 million was paid in grant in aid to the Commission for Racial Equality.

Terrorism

48. Mr. Michael McNair-Wilson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met his European counterparts to discuss anti-terrorist measures.

Mr. Hurd: I attended a meeting of Trevi Ministers in Copenhagen on 9 December 1987 under the Danish presidency. I shall be attending the ministerial meeting under the German presidency in Munich on 3 June. I have also had bilateral talks with my French and Portuguese counterparts in London this year.

Prison Officers' Association

49. Sir John Farr: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met members of the Prison Officers' Association; and what matters were discussed.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend last met members of the Prison Officers' Association on 30 March. They discussed overcrowding, the staffing of establishments and the involvement of the private sector in all aspects of the remand system.

European Broadcasting

52. Mr. Dykes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he next expects to discuss European broadcasting problems with his counterparts in the member states of the European Economic Community and the Council of Europe.

Mr. Tim Renton: The next meeting of Council of Europe Broadcasting Ministers is due to take place in Stockholm on 23-24 November to discuss European broadcasting policy in an international context. There are no formal arrangements for meetings of Broadcasting Ministers in the framework of the European Community, but further discussion of the draft EC directive on broadcasting will no doubt take place in the Council in due course.

Traffic (London)

53. Mr. Adley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what discussions he intends to hold with the Metropolitan police to discuss traffic organisation in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend meets the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis from time to time to discuss a range of policing issues, although there are at present no plans to meet specifically in order to discuss traffic organisation in London. Officials in the Department have regular contacts with Metropolitan police staff on traffic issues.

Exeter Prison

56. Mr. Speller: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects that Exeter prison, will hold no more than the number of prisoners it was originally built to hold; and how many prisoners on remand awaiting trial are currently held there.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 May 126 unconvicted prisoners were held in Exeter prison, of whom 68 were awaiting trial in the Crown court. Since the numbers likely to be committed to prison by the courts in the future cannot be predicted with any certainty, the length of time for which overcrowding will continue in a particular prison cannot be forecast. My right hon. Friend announced on 30 March a number of measures aimed at substantially increasing the capacity of the prison system as a whole over the next few years, and thus directly tackling the overcrowding problem.

Lunar House (Mail)

57. Ms. Short: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action is being taken to clear the backlog of mail at Lunar house.

Mr. Renton: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given earlier to my hon. Friend the Member for Richmond and Barnes (M.. Hanley).

Turkish Students

60. Mr. Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has received any representations from the English language school industry concerning the treatment of Turkish students by immigration officials on arrival in the United Kingdom to attend courses.

Mr. Renton: Yes. They have been replied to.

Cheshire Police

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will authorise a rise in the police establishment in Cheshire.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As my right hon. Friend announced yesterday in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Crawley (Mr. Soames), at columns 466-67, he has approved 15 posts for the Cheshire constabulary with effect from 1 June 1988.

Boundary Commission (General Review)

Mr. Hayward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of 7 July 1987, Official Report, column 96, to the hon. Member for Hazel Grove (Mr. Arnold) what information he has as to whether the Boundary Commission still expects the general review to commence in 1990; and how far in advance of the statutory deadline the commission is aiming to report on the outcome of this review.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Within the limits prescribed by the Parliamentary Constituencies Act 1986, the timing of each commission's work is a matter for it to determine. I understand, however, that the Boundary Commission for England hopes to submit a report fairly early in the 1993-98 period allowed by the Act, and that the start of their review is likely to be announced early in 1991.

Channel Ferries, Dover

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will call for a report from the chief constable of Kent as to what steps the police have taken at Dover to clear a road to the Channel ferries for vehicles wishing to load.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I understand from the chief constable of Kent that access to Dover docks on the public highway has remained clear throughout the current dispute. The policing of Dover harbour board property and movement from there to the ferries is a matter for the board.

Prisoners

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total period of time that a prisoner sentenced to one year's imprisonment who had (a) been held on remand for six months, and (b) been held on remand for one month, would spend in custody, having lost entitlement to three months remission.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: (a) nine months, of which three months would be served after sentence.

(b) nine months, of which eight months would be served after sentence.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what account is taken of periods for which prisoners have been held on remand in calculating loss of remission under rule 54 of the prison rules.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any remission forfeited prospectively under prison rule 54 during a period on remand may be deducted from the total amount of remission which, otherwise, would be earned in respect of that period.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the number of prisoners presently serving sentences whose total period of custody after loss of remission will be longer because periods during which they were held on remand have been disregarded in calculating loss of remission than it would have been if such periods had been taken into account in the implementation of rule 54 of the prison rules.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Of those presently serving sentences, none.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is issued by his Department on the account to be taken of periods spent on remand in interpreting rule 54 of the prison rules; if he will place a copy of such guidance in the Library; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Guidance is contained in prison standing order 3C 6(5) as amended by circular instruction 23/1988 (standing order amendment 427); copies of these documents are in the Library.

Asylum

Mr. Holland: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will provide a breakdown by nationality of the number of passengers seeking political asylum who were detained under Immigration Act powers in 1987 in (a) Prison Department establishments and (b) immigration detention accommodation;

(2) how many of the total number of passengers seeking political asylum were granted temporary admission during (a) 1986 and (b) 1987.

Mr. Renton: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Professor Vera Ivanovna Rasdolskaya

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will be giving a substantive reply to the letter of 15 February from the hon. Member for Wanstead and Woodford drawing his attention to the visa application made on 7 November 1987 by Mrs. Bernard for her cousin, Professor Vera Ivanovna Rasdolskaya, to pay a family visit to the United Kingdom during August.

Mr. Renton: I replied to the hon. Member yesterday.

Passports (Mr. and Mrs. Read)

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make inquiries into the reason why Mr. Ronald Read and Mrs. Doris Patricia Read of 6 Montgomery Court, North Shoebury, Southend on Sea, who applied to Peterborough for passports on 17 March explaining that they were required by 9 May, have not received them; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: A letter requesting £7·50 balance of fee failed to reach Mr. and Mrs. Read, who moved house on 12 May. The Peterborough passport office has since made contact with them by telephone and their passport will be issued immediately on receipt of the balance of fee, in time for their holiday in early June. Regrettably, the application was not given any priority when it was received on 25 March.

Magistrates Courts

Mr. Bermingham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of vacancies at the latest available date for (a) justices clerks and (b) other staff in magistrates courts in the area of each magistrates court committee.

Mr. John Patten: There are no vacancies for justices' clerks. The latest date for which information is available for other staff is 1 April 1987, the information drawn from a survey conducted by the joint negotiating committee for magistrates courts staff. This information is set out in the table. The information for staff vacancies as at 1 April 1988 is not yet available.

Press Standards Council

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to set up a Press Standards Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Renton: The Government have no plans to set up a council to oversee press standards. There is already in place a system of self-regulation under the auspices of the Press Council.

Essex Constabulary

Dr. Michael Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received regarding the strength of the Essex constabulary; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: My right hon. Friend has just approved 20 additional posts for Essex police. This brings to 90 the number of posts we have been able to approve so far in response to its application for 150 posts over the three years 1986-87 to 1988-89. The total number of posts approved since May 1979 is now 237. The remaining posts will be considered when my right hon. Friend next takes decisions on the allocation of police manpower.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Hospital Closures (Shropshire)

Mr. Biffen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how many representations he has received to date concerning the proposed hospital closure programme of the Shropshire health authority; and how many favour the proposals of the authority.

Mrs. Currie: Since my reply to my right hon. Friend on 11 March, at column 395, we have received over 700 further letters concerning health services in Shropshire. None has expressed support for hospital closures in the district. All will be taken into account if proposals come to Ministers for decision.

Spending Power

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to reply to the question from the hon. Member for Birkenhead on net weekly spending power to which he gave a holding reply on 25 April.

Mr. Portillo: I have replied to the hon. Member today.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish tables similar to his Department's tax benefit/model table, and assuming in each case that 25 per cent. of income is spent on housing costs, showing the net weekly spending power for each of (a) a single person, (b) a married couple with no children, (c) a couple with a child aged 11 years, (d) a couple with two children aged eight and 11 years, (e) a couple with three children aged eight, 11 and 15 years and (f) a couple with four children aged three, eight, 11 and 15 years, with weekly earnings of (i) £180, (ii) £190, (iii) £200, (iv) £250, (v) £300 and (vi) £400, under (A) the original tax and benefit system and (B) the new system implemented in April.

Mr. Scott: I regret that the reply can be supplied only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the figures given comparing net weekly spending power under the supplementary benefit system with those under income support, 11 March, Official Report, columns 406-8 take into consideration the fact that under the new regulations claimants will have to pay water rates and 20 per cent. of general rates.

Mr. Portillo [holding answer 25 April 1988]: The figures, at columns 406-8, Official Report, 11 March, show the actual cash receipts of claimants, from which they would be required to pay water rates (pre- and post-reform) and the minimum contribution to general rates (post-reform). There is therefore an inadvertent inconsistency in the treatment of general rates which the footnotes should have highlighted. The revised table shows the net position after all housing costs and water rates have been paid. They also include revised estimates of the hypothetical supplementary benefit assessments which such recipients might have received, had the reforms not been introduced.

Overseas Pensioners

Mr. Andrew Bowden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total number of pensioners overseas currently in receipt of United Kingdom pensions; and if he will give (a) the number in countries where annual increments apply and (c) the number of countries where annual increments do not apply.

Mr. Scott: The total number of persons overseas in receipt of United Kingdom retirement pensions and widows benefits in December 1987 was 461,422. These are the latest figures available. The numbers in each country are as follows:

The number of countries where annual increments apply is 182,746. The number of countries where annual increments do not apply and where United Kingdom pensioners are living is 145, and the number of pensioners in those countries is 275,901. There was a further 2,775 pensioners whose country of residence was not known at the time the statistics were prepared.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Robin Cook: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will disregard the invalid care allowance in assessing entitlement to income support and national insurance benefits.

Mr. Scott: No. Invalid care allowance, income support and national insurance benefits are maintenance benefits, intended to cover a person's day-to-day living expenses. To disregard invalid care allowance when assessing entitlement to income support or national insurance benefits would mean that provision was being made twice over from public funds to cover the same needs.

Supplementary Benefit Claimants (Nottingham)

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, pursuant to the reply of 10 May, Official Report, columns 89-90, he will supply the numbers for the disabled pensioners, single parents and other groups by category in the statistics for those claiming supplementary benefit in 1979 and in 1987 for the David Lane and Shakespeare street offices of his Department in Nottingham.

Mr. Portillo: Information is not available in the precise form requested.

The number of supplementary benefit claimants by category at 27 November 1979 and 18 November 1987 for the offices requested is as follows:

	David Lane		Shakespeare Street

Some claimants may fit a number of categories, but each claimant is counted only once for statistical purposes.

Benefits (Homeless Claimants)

Mr. Jim Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the effect on the street homelessness of benefit payments to homeless claimants being paid in arrears rather than in advance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The arrangements for paying income support in arrears to the majority of recipients under pension age, including homeless people, began only recently on 11 April. It is too early to judge the effects of this change on homeless claimants. Moreover, by their very nature the number of people in this group is difficult to estimate. However, we will monitor any indicators of change, such as representations from organisations dealing with homeless people.

Electorate (Non-metropolitan Districts)

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the 30 English non-metropolitan districts which have shown the greatest percentage growth in their electorate since 1978, and what have been the percentage growth and actual figures in each case.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will introduce legislation specifically to prohibit any information collected for health purposes being disclosed to community charge officer; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: No. Health authorities and family practitioner committees are already obliged to keep information received for health purposes confidential.

Employment Status (Disputes)

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary for Social Services how many cases in which employed or self-employed status was in dispute came to the attention of officials in his Department in 1987.

Mr. Portillo: This information is not available. However, there is a procedure whereby a person who disputes a departmental ruling can have it formally referred for determination by the Secretary of State and there were 85 such references involving employment status in 1987.

Health Spending

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will now publish a table showing for 1986, for each member state of the European Economic Community (i) total, (ii) public and (iii) private spending on health as a proportion of gross domestic product.

Mr. Newton: The available data for 1986 from the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development are as follows:

Note: Luxumbourg is excluded from the table because of reported inconsistencies in the national health accounts.

Health Authorities (Oxford)

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the expenditure of the district health authorities of the Oxford region in each of the last 10 years (a) in cash, (b) adjusted for inflation and (c) expressed as a percentage of the regional total.

Mr. Newton: Following is information derived from the annual accounts of the district health authorities in the Oxford region from their establishment on 1 April 1982 until 1986-87 (the latest year available):

Disabled Persons Act 1986

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caernarfon of 1 March, Official Report, column 552, if he will give the dates on which meetings have taken place with representatives of local authorities on the implementation of the Disabled Persons Act 1986.

Mr. Scott: Since the Disabled Persons (Services, Consultation and Representation) Act received the Royal Assent on 8 July 1986, meetings with representatives of the local authority associations for England have taken place on the following dates:

24 July 1986
19 December 1986
24 February 1987
14 April 1987
14 May 1987
2 June 1987
15 June 1987
9 October 1987
20 October 1987

Apart from these formal meetings there have been frequent contacts with the association about the Act.

Resource Allocation Working Party

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects that the revision of the national resource allocation working party will be complete; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he has any plans to improve the operation of the resource allocation working party; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he has received the report of the working party on the resource allocation working party; if he will publish the report; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The programme of analysis and research undertaken for the review of the resource allocation working party has been completed, and we are considering the resulting recommendations from the NHS Management Board. A statement will be made in due course.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will indicate for each of the years it has operated the proportion of total expenditure allocated through the resource allocation working party formula to each of the Thames health regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: The table shows the proportion of the total revenue resources available for distribution under the terms of the resource allocation working party formula allocated to each of the Thames regional health authorities since 1977-78.

Note: Excludes elements of funding protected from the redistributive effect of RAWP, for example, the service increment for teaching and supra-regional services funding. Similarly excludes funding directed at specific service needs: for example AIDS and breast cancer screening.

Mr. McCrindle: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to review the proportion of total expenditure provided to the Thames health regions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: We will consider the position of all regional health authorities, and the pace at which their resource allocations are brought into line with their target shares of the available resources, in updating regions' planning assumptions for 1989-90, which we hope to issue soon.

The review of the resource allocation working party formula has of course been re-examining the way in which regional targets are calculated. We shall therefore need to consider carefully, in determining regions' annual allocations in future, the pace at which we should take account of any changes which may flow from the review.

Social Security Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services how much has been budgeted for by his Department for advertising and activities associated with the changes in social security provisions; and how much has been spent to date.

Mr. Portillo: Total spending up to the beginning of the current financial year by the Department's information division on providing factual information (leaflets, technical guides as well as advertising) about changes in social security provisions was approximately £12 million.

It is expected that a similar sum will be spent in the current financial year. To date about £1·5 million has been spent.

Claimants (Local Records)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will now require local offices of his Department, serving parts of neighbouring parliamentary constituencies, to maintain records of claimants under each type of benefit, grant or loan on a constituency basis.

Mr. Portillo: Local office areas are not conterminous with parliamentary constituencies. It would be impractical to maintain local office records of claimants on a constituency basis.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Service whether the recently announced payments of housing benefit to persons living in sheltered accommodation, while trying to sell their house, are intended to be loans or grants.

Mr. Portillo: Neither. As long as a claimant is taking all reasonable steps to dispose of the former home, and provided he qualifies for it on income and other grounds, housing benefit is payable in the same way as for any other claimant.

Births (London)

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish in the Official Report the most recent information he has of ranking amongst London boroughs in respect of (a) crude birth rate, (b) period fertility rate, (c) births of less than 2,500 grams, (d) perinatal mortality and (e) deaths under one year.

Mrs. Currie: The information is shown in the table. The latest available data year is 1986.

[1] Rates for the City of London are based on a total of 35 births (all weights); there were no stillbirths or deaths under one year of age.
[2] Perinatal mortality rate: deaths under one week plus stillbirths per 1,000 total births.
[3] Infant mortality rate: deaths under 1 year per 1,000 livebirths.
[4] The total period fertility rate (TPFR) represents the average number of children which women would have in their reproductive lifetime if the age-specific fertility rates for each area were to remain constant.
[5] Total births per 1,000 population.
[6] Rankings are from highest to lowest in all cases.

Child Cancer (Hull)

Mr. Randell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the small areas health statistics unit will be involved in the analysis of the child cancer clusters in the Hull area, in the light of the statement of 10 March Official Report, columns 750-51 by the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, the hon. Member for Lewisham, East (Mr. Moynihan).

Mrs. Currie: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Beverley (Mr. Cran) on 30 March 1988, at columns 550-51.

Bronchitis and Emphysema

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the report on bronchitis and emphysema by the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council has been published; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Scott: The Industrial Injuries Advisory Council's report on bronchitis and emphysema is published today and a copy has been placed in the Library. The council concludes that there is insufficient evidence at the present time to warrant prescription, under the terms of section 76(2) of the Social Security Act 1975, of bronchitis and emphysema as industrial diseases in their own right.

The council calls for more research into non-smoking dust-exposed workers and undertakes to review the subject again when such evidence becomes available. It also announces that a separate investigation will be conducted into respiratory disease in welders. Finally, the report clarifies that emphysema caused by inhaled cadmium fume is already covered under the terms of prescription of the prescribed disease C18 (poisoning by cadmium).

We have accepted the council's conclusions and recommendations.

St. Albans (Electorate)

Mr. Robert B. Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will set out a table showing the 1988 electorate for each ward in the district of St. Albans.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is as follows:

Household Incomes

Mr. Carttiss: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will publish the new statistics on households with below average incomes, as recommended in the technical report placed in the Library on 29 March; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Following the recommendations in the report of the technical review of the DHSS low income statistics, which was placed in the Library on 29 March, I have today placed in the Library the first edition of the new series "Households below average income: a statistical analysis". The tables cover the years 1981, 1983 and 1985. In addition, I have also placed in the Library the final edition of the "Low Income Families" figures covering the same years.

The tables show that living standards have been rising significantly, and that those with the lowest incomes have shared in the improvements. Indeed, between 1981 and 1985 the average incomes of those in the bottom tenth rose by over 8 per cent.—well ahead of the average increases for the population as a whole.

Premature Births

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has concerning the number of premature babies born in each of the last five years which have survived at (a) 24 weeks gestation, (b) 25 weeks gestation, (c) 26 weeks gestation, (d) 27 weeks gestation and (e) 28 weeks gestation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton [holding answer 16 May 1988]: Information is not available in precisely the form requested.

The nearest available data are shown in the tabie. The data have been taken from the maternity section of the "Hospital In-patient Enquiry" (HIPE) and shows the estimated number of babies, born at relevant gestation weeks, who were subsequently discharged alive from NHS hospitals. The data are for England only, for the years 1982-85. 1981 data are not available, whilst 1985 is the last data year for HIPE.

Cancer Screening

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the average wage for those staff involved in cervical cancer screening;

(2) how many staff involved with cervical cancer screening earn over £17,000 per annum.

Mrs. Currie [holding answer 18 May 1988]: There is not a group of staff occupied wholly on cervical cancer screening. A range of staff in district health authorities and family practitioner committees (for example, GPs, practice nurses, pathologists, laboratory staff, administrative staff) are involved to some extent in the programme among their other responsibilities. Information on actual salaries is not held centrally.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Member's Questions

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date he intends to provide substantive replies to remaining questions put down by the hon. Member for Brent, East for answer on 26 and 28 April.

Mr. Stanley: Substantive replies will be provided as soon as possible.

Spirit of Enniskillen Bursaries

Sir John Biggs-Davison: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the purpose, scope and funding of the Spirit of Enniskillen bursaries.

Dr. Mawhinney: In introducing this bursary scheme my aim is to capture for future generations of young people the spirit of forgiveness and tolerance which emerged following the tragic bombing in Enniskillen on Remembrance Sunday last year.

The scheme will give young people from Northern Ireland the opportunity to experience at first hand, in a country of their choice, how people from diverse backgrounds can live together in peace and harmony and then use the knowledge gained to foster better community understanding and tolerance at home.

I have provided a sum of £150,000 to the King George VI Memorial Council for investment, the income from which will be made available through the Youth Committee for Northern Ireland for the award of bursaries to mixed groups of Protestant and Catholic young people selected by a special panel which I shall appoint.

Between 24 and 30 young people will be selected—equally from across the religious divide—for bursaries each year.

The only condition I have set is that two places be earmarked each year exclusively for young people from the Enniskillen area, one from each tradition.

Irish Language

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what percentage of secondary schools in Northern Ireland taught Irish in the academic years 1985-1986, 1986-1987 and 1987-1988;

(2) what percentage of grammar schools in Northern Ireland taught Irish in the academic years 1985-1986, 1986-87 and 1987-1988.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 May 1988]: This information is not readily available for the 1985-86 and 1987-88 years and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In 1986-87, 39·4 per cent. of all secondary schools taught Irish — the figure for secondary intermediate schools being 38·4 per cent. and for grammar schools 41·9 per cent.

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether a quota system operates in relation to students who wish to study Irish/Celtic studies as part of the Bachelor of Education degree course in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Mawhinney [holding answer 16 May 1988]: No. Quotas are operated only in relation to overall intakes; institutions determine the number of places to be offered in each subject, provided numbers meet normal viability criteria.

THE ARTS

Arts Consultants

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Minister for the Arts whether he will list the arts consultants that his Department has employed in each of the past five years, the projects on which they have worked and the cost per consultancy.

Mr. Luce [holding answer 29 April 1988]: The Office of Arts and Libraries was established in July 1983. I list the arts consultants employed by the Office of Arts and Libraries from 1984-85 to 1987-88.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Wheat

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to the reply to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell) on 22 February, Official Report, columns 19-20, if he will give the world price for (a) milling wheat and (b) other wheat, for each year since 1979.

Mr. Donald Thompson: There is no single world price for wheat. A wide range of prices are quoted, reflecting the different qualities of wheats of different origins. Where large surpluses exist actual trade may take place at prices lower than those quoted.

The figures are for Canadian Western Red Spring No. 1 (13·5 per cent.), a good quality hard milling wheat, and Argentinian Trigo Pan, a poorer quality wheat which may nevertheless in certain circumstances be used for milling. The figures are officially quoted export prices from those countries and thus do not include any shipping or transport costs or any import levies which may be payable when those grains are imported into other countries.

Mr. Ralph Howell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will state (a) the lowest and (b) the average price of imported wheat into the United Kingdom for each year since 1979, showing the quantity of all imported wheat in each of these years.

Mr. Donald Thompson: The annual quantity and value of all wheat imported into the United Kingdom between 1979 and 1987 are shown in the following table:

	Quantity ('000 tonnes)	Value (£'000)	Average Price £ 'tonne
1979	2,601	256,524	98·6

The average price has been derived by dividing the quantity by the value. Data on the prices of consignments are not available and it is therefore not possible to determine the lowest yearly prices.

Near Market Research and Development

Mr. Steel: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will publish the review being carried out in his Department on near market research and development; and if he will make a statememt.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I refer the right hon. Member to the replies given on 1 March, at column 546, to the hon. Member for Bristol, South (Ms. Primarolo) and on 22 April, at column 587, to the hon. Member for Aberdeen, South (Mr. Doran).

Orchard Replanting

Mr. Moss: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he has any plans to introduce a new scheme under the orchard replanting grant in time for this autumn's planting.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Growers were able to benefit from the very generous grants for orchard replanting which were available for the five years until March this year. We are aware of producers' desire for further grants and are considering their case.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress his Department is making on the live testing of badgers for tuberculosis; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Work is continuing at the Ministry's central veterinary laboratory. The results have so far been encouraging. The next step will be to apply the test to infected badgers under field conditions.

Chernobyl (Compensation)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many applications have been received from farmers in England other than Cumbria claiming to have suffered losses as a result of the Chernobyl disaster but who had not been compensated under the Government's scheme; when those applications were received and when considered; how many were rejected; and if he will make a statement on the general pattern of the defects in the applications which led to their rejection.

Mr. Donald Thompson: None.

Animal Medicines Licensing

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's consideration of the Cunliffe review of animal medicines licensing.

Mr. Donald Thompson: Organisations representing interests most likely to be affected by the review's recommendations have been asked to send me their comments. Meanwhile, we are giving urgent consideration to internal changes in organisation which would be necessary.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Mr. Sidney Clark

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what actions have been taken by Her Majesty's embassy in Bangkok concerning the situation of Mr. Sidney Clark, held in prison in Thailand.

Mr. Eggar: Mr. Clark was imprisoned in Thailand from 23 May 1980 until 1 March 1988.

Throughout that time he received consular visits at intervals of between four and 10 weeks. Her Majesty's embassy provided facilities for the transfer of funds to him from family and friends. They also negotiated with prison authorities for improvement in his diet. In June 1984 arrangements were made for him to be seen by an embassy panel doctor. He was encouraged to paint and provided with canvasses and paints. Advice was tendered about his plea for a royal pardon. Counselling of a general nature was provided.

United Kingdom Citizens (Foreign Prisons)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total number of United Kingdom citizens known to his Department held in foreign prisons; and what guidelines govern visits by his officials to such prisoners.

Mr. Eggar: According to the most recent survey there were, on 10 May 1988, to the best of our knowledge, 1,268 British nationals detained in foreign prisons.

Standing instructions for British consular officers overseas are that British nationals should be visited as soon as possible after their arrest or detention. Thereafter, they should be visited at reasonable intervals, whether awaiting trial or serving a sentence (unless it has been made clear by the prisoner that visits are not required). Frequency of visits depends on the circumstances of a case, local prison conditions and the situation of a particular prisoner.

Burmah Endeavour

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the attack on the Burmah Endeavour in the Gulf; and what representations he has made to the Iraqi Government on this matter.

Mrs. Chalker: The Burmah Endeavour, a United Kingdom-registered vessel, was hit during an attack by Iraqi aircraft on Larak Island in the southern Gulf, at 0940 hours on 14 May. The ship was set on fire but not badly damaged. There were no casualties.

The Iraqi ambassador was summoned to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 17 May to receive a strong protest about this premeditated, unprovoked and unlawful attack. Our ambassador in Baghdad will register a similar protest.

Philippines

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will request the Government of the Philippines to supply a copy of the letter which that Government claim is a request from the British Broadcasting Corporation for an ambush to take place to publicise the activities of rebels in the area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: This is a matter for the BBC, which has, I understand, denied allegations of involvement in the ambush. I see no grounds for British Government intervention.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Building Societies Act 1986

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made on the review of schedule 8 to the Building Societies Act 1986; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: I have laid two draft orders before the House today. If these orders receive parliamentary approval and are made, the Building Societies Commission, with the consent of the Treasury, intends to make two further orders to complete the package. Copies of provisional drafts of these orders, together with a summary note of the intended provisions of all four orders, have been placed in the Library of the House.

The orders will implement the main conclusions of the review of schedule 8 to the Building Societies' Act 1986 which I outlined in my statement on 2 February, Official Report, columns 537-39. The orders will do two things. They will recast schedule 8 so that it proscribes particular activities within certain broadly specified powers instead of banning everything except narrowly specified powers. And they will implement a wide-ranging extension of societies' powers to provide financial services, and effectively give societies the full scope permissible within the primary legislation.

The mainstream business of societies is, and must remain, that of raising funds from the public for lending on house purchase. But we believe that societies should be free to undertake activities which complement their mainstream business and to provide the wider range of finance services which customers now expect. Societies will, as at present, continue to provide services primarily to the personal sector, rather than to companies. The proposed measures will enable them to compete more effectively in their primary markets.

Societies will, therefore, subject to certain limited restrictions, be allowed:

(a) to own or take an equity stake in a life insurance company, and to take an equity stake in a general insurance company;
(b) to own or take an equity stake in stockbrokers;
(c) to undertake fund management including management of unit trusts generally (rather than just for the provision of pensions, as at present);
(d) to offer a wider range of banking and housing related services than hitherto.

The draft Commercial Assets and Services Order which was laid today will replace schedule 8 to the Act with a completely new schedule 8 which will provide six broad service powers:

Investment services
Insurance services
Banking services
Trusteeship
Executorship
Land services

A society will then be able to provide any service within those general areas unless it is specifically precluded or restricted by other parts of the schedule.

Societies may need to hold new forms of asset to undertake a wider range of business. This order therefore contains provision for societies to hold leasable chattels (to undertake leasing and hire purchase), residual mortgage debts (to enable them to repurchase the residue of a securitised pool of their mortgages), mortgage finance rights (mortgage backed securities, and similar instruments) and bridging debts (to enable societies more readily to provide temporary bridging finance for house purchase).

The Building Societies Commission is prepared to examine the possibility of making an order to allow societies to acquire mortgages from other lenders. This will be the subject of further consultation with the Building Societies Association in due course. There are also a number of matters which are consequential to this review. For example, the Commission will be consulting interested parties on the proposed scope of an order to extend the required coverage of the Building Societies Ombudsman scheme to reflect the wider scope of societies' activities as a result of these orders.

To provide societies with the necessary scope to offer the wider range of services it is proposed to increase the commercial asset limits in the draft limits on commercial assets order which I also laid today. This proposes an increase in the class 2 and 3 limits to 17½ and 7½ per cent., respectively in January 1990, to 20 and 10 per cent., respectively in January 1991 and a further increase to the maximum extent possible within the primary legislation (that is 25 and 15 per cent. respectively), in January 1993.

Subject to parliamentary approval of these orders, the Building Societies Commission will make a designation of qualifying bodies order to allow societies to invest in or support new subsidiaries to provide the schedule 8 services. They will also, as previously announced, make in due course a limits on lending order to increase the unsecured lending limit to individals to £10,000. I do not expect any substantial changes to these orders from the provisional drafts placed in the Library.

These proposals are a substantial step forward in building society development. They will give societies the freedom to develop and compete across a wide range of financial services business.

Government Data Network Project

Mr. Haselhurst: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, following the response of the Paymaster General to the Adjournment debate on 25 February, Official Report, columns 550-54, he is able to announce any further progress on the Government data network project.

Mr. Brooke: The Government have examined the feasible options for meeting the foreseen data communications needs of four major Departments (Department of Health and Social Security, Inland Revenue, HM Customs and Excise and Home Office). The costs of these have been compared with the costs of meeting these requirements through a Government data network (GDN). This was based on tenders received in March from the three consortia (Computer Services Company/British Telecom, Racal-Scicon and Cable and Wireless/International Computers Ltd. (known as ICONS)). The comparison showed that, over 10 years, a GDN would be significantly cheaper than the alternatives, even before taking account of the superior service and greater security offered by a GDN.

The Government have therefore decided to proceed with the Government data network.

The three competing tenders for the GDN have been comprehensively evaluated and the Government intend to award the contract for the GDN service to Racal-Scicon Ltd., subject to final agreement of terms.

As I explained to the House on 25 February, at column 547, we have drawn on the most appropriate technical expertise available in both Government and the private sector in designing the arrangements for security and privacy for the GDN service. We have ensured that the Data Protection Registrar has been kept in touch with plans and that he is content with them. We have also kept Oftel informed during the procurement.

Acceptance testing of the service, using the HM Customs and Excise VALID (VAT Access and Local Input of Data) application system is expected to begin by the end of the year. An operational GDN service will be available early next year.

Personal Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give the number of people who have no income declared for tax purposes other than unearned income by their highest marginal rate of tax in 1987-88;

(2) if he will give for 1987-88 the number of people paying tax at (i) 60 per cent., (ii) 55 per cent., (iii) 50 per cent., (iv) 45 per cent. and (v) 40 per cent. who derive (a) 100 per cent., (b) 90 to 100 per cent., (c) 75 to 100 per cent. and (d) 50 to 100 per cent. of their income from unearned income.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 18 April 1988]: Estimates of tax-paying tax units who derive more than half their income from investment are given in the table. All estimates are subject to considerable uncertainty because they are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes. Also, the data from the survey on investment income have been adjusted to allow for investment income not reported to tax offices, for example where basic rate liability is satisfied by deduction of tax at source. Estimates for basic rate taxpayers are therefore particularly tentative.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will give figures at 1988-89 prices in the form of tables 1 and 2 of the Inland Revenue press release dated 15 March on independent taxation of husbands and wives classified by joint income of husbands and wives, giving figures for joint incomes of (a) up to £5,000, (b) £5,000 to £10,000, (c) £10,000 to £15,000, (d) £15,000 to £20,000, (e) £20,000 to £25,000, (f) £25,000 to £30,000, (g) £30,000 to £50,000, (h) £50,000 to £75,000, (i) £75,000 to £100,000 and (j) over £100,000, giving the total reduction in tax for each range of joint income;

(2) if he will give figures for the total reduction in tax separately for husband and wife at 1988-89 prices in the form of tables 1 and 2 of the Inland Revenue press release dated 15 March on independent taxation of husband and wife, classified by joint incomes of husbands and wives, giving figures for joint incomes of (a) up to £5,000, (b) £5,000 to £10,000, (c) £10,000 to £15,000, (d) £15,000 to £20,000, (e) £20,000 to £25,000, (f) £25,000 to £30,000, (g) £30,000 to £50,000, (h) £50,000 to £75,000, (i) £75,000 to £100,000 and (j) over £100,000;

(3) if he will give figures for the total reduction in tax separately for husband and wife for 1988-89 on the assumption that the independent taxation provisions were operative for 1988-89, in the form of tables 1 and 2 of the Inland Revenue press release dated 15 March on independent taxation of husband and wife, classified by joint incomes of husbands and wives, giving figures for joint incomes of (a) up to £5,000, (b) £5,000 to £10,000, (c) £10,000 to £15,000, (d) £15,000 to £20,000, (e) £20,000 to £25,000, (f) £25,000 to £30,000, (g) £30,000 to £50,000, (h) £50,000 to £75,000, (i) £75,000 to £100,000 and (j) over £100,000, stating the number of husbands and wives falling within each income group.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answers 29 April and 9 May 1988]: Available estimates are given in the tables. The reductions in income tax liability relate to a full year at 1990-91 projected levels of income. The 1988 Budget proposals for income tax rates and allowances have been indexed to 1990-91 according to the statutory formula. They are on a consistent basis with the estimates of the direct revenue costs of independent taxation given in the 1988 Financial Statement and Budget Report and the estimates in section 5 of the press release on independent taxation. I regret that reliable estimates for detailed ranges of income above £50,000 per year are not available, as estimates are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes. All estimates are provisional and subject to considerable uncertainty. Estimates at 1988-89 levels of income are not available.

Notes:
1. Table 2 assumes that before Independent Taxation the wife's income is the top slice of the husband's income.
2. Estimates are given to the nearest 10,000 taxpayers or £10 million tax. Some groups in the tables have been aggregated to provide estimates and a dash is used to denote fewer than 5,000 taxpayers or less than £5 million tax.
3. Aged taxpayers are where either the husband or the wife is aged 65 or over.

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give for 1987-88 and 1988-89 by the highest marginal rate of income tax for 1987-88 (i) the number of tax units in receipt of unearned income and (ii) to total tax levied on unearned income under the tax rates operating in 1987-88 and 1988-89.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 18 April 1988]: Estimates of the numbers of tax-paying tax units in receipt of investment income are in the table. All estimates are uncertain because they are based on a projection of the 1985-86 survey of personal incomes. Also, the data on investment income from the Survey have been adjusted to allow for investment income not reported to tax offices, for example where basic rate liability is satisfied by deduction of tax at source. Figures for the number of basic rate taxpayers with investment income in the table therefore provide only a guide to the order of magnitude.

The tax liability on investment income for 1987-88 and 1988-89 is estimated at £6·2 billion and £6·3 billion respectively. The 1988-89 estimate assumes that the 1988 Budget proposals for income tax rates and allowances are implemented. In the calculation, investment income has been treated as the top slice of income and all investment income taxed as though it were received gross and subject to the individual's appropriate marginal rate of tax.

Central Office of Information

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when the Central Office of Information was removed from the ministerial responsibility of the Paymaster General; and how the change was announced.

Mr. Lawson [holding answer 18 May 1988]: I transferred delegated ministerial authority for the COI from the Paymaster General to the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 1 March.

Taxation

Mr. Gordon Brown: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will deposit in the Library details of the methodology used to assess rates, value added tax and other indirect taxes in his answer to the hon. Member for Dumfermline, East on 19 April, Official Report, columns 417-8.

Mr. Norman Lamont [holding answer 29 April 1988]: In summary the methodology is:

(i) Average earnings for each financial year are derived from the New Earnings Survey series for "full time males on adult rates, whose pay for the survey pay-period was not affected by absence". The series for years before 1983 has to be adjusted to take account of a change in definition in that year. The series is projected from 1986-87 to 1988-89 using the assumptions provided to the Government Actuary and reported in chapter 3 of the Autumn Statement 1987.

For each multiple of average earnings:

(ii) Income tax liability is calculated using the personal allowances, income tax rates and thresholds for the appropriate year. The man is assumed to claim no allowances or reliefs other than the relevant basic personal allowance and, where appropriate, child tax allowances.

(iii) National insurance contributions (NIC) are calculated using the lower earnings limit, the upper earnings limit and, in relevant years, the limits on reduced rate NIC bands for the financial year. The NIC rates used are those for a man not contracted-out of SERPs.

(iv) Child benefit is calculated using the rate in force for the financial year. Where the rate changes during the financial year, a financial year average s calculated, taking account of the number of weeks of the financial year for which each rate applied.

(v) Disposable income is calculated as the sum of gross earnings and child benefit, less income tax and NIC.

(vi) Ten per cent. of disposable income is assumed to be saved. This simplifying assumption is needed as indirect taxes are calculated by reference to expenditure, rather than disposable income (see vii). The same assumption is used for all years so that changes in indirect taxes reflect changes in the tax regime, rather than changes in savings behaviour.

(vii) Payments of VAT, each of the Customs and Excise duties, vehicle excise duty, domestic rates and other indirect taxes including intermediate taxes such as employers' NIC are estimated using regression equations derived from the 1985 Family Expenditure Survey (FES). These relate indirect taxes paid to expenditure; they are simple linear equations with a constant term and expenditure as the independent variable.

There are separate equations for different family types to reflect their varying expenditure patterns. Separate VAT equations are developed to reflect changes in VAT coverage since 1978-79 (two rates of VAT in 1978-79 and the extension of the VAT base from 1984-85 onwards).

The equations are developed from the middle 80 per cent. of observations in the FES to avoid possible distortion caused by inclusion of extreme values. The equations cannot be used outside the range of expenditure from which they are developed and this restriction is implemented by only estimating indirect tax payments within the range of three quarters to one and a half times average earnings.

The equations developed from the FES are at the prices and levels of consumption of that FES (currently 1985). They are therefore scaled backwards and forwards from 1985 to financial years between 1978-79 and 1988-89 taking account of changes in total consumption and changes in revenue from the individual tax.

Payments of individual indirect taxes, or groups of indirect taxes, by a particular family type at a given level of earnings are calculated by putting their spending level derived from (v) and (vi) into the appropriate equations.

A more detailed explanation could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

National Mobility Scheme

Mr. French: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the operation of the national mobility scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Roe: Yes. The national mobility scheme is voluntary, but nearly all local authorities participate and I welcome the wholehearted support of the local authority associations; their representatives, together with those of other participating bodies, form the steering committee which oversees and monitors the scheme. With over 47,000 moves achieved since 1981-82, the scheme makes a valued contribution to housing mobility.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Warren: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action is he taking to ensure that planning permission is withheld for development in locations where improvements to the railway infrastructure may be required for Channel tunnel traffic.

Mr. Waldegrave: Applications for planning permission are, in the normal course of events, dealt with by the local planning authorities, who are required to have regard to the provisions of the development plan and to any other material considerations. My right hon. Friend becomes involved only if he calls in an application for his own decision, or if the matter is referred to him on appeal.

Proposals for the improvement of railway infrastructure would be a material consideration in deciding a planning application or appeal if they were relevant in any particular case. The weight to be given to them would depend inter alia on the likelihood that the railway proposals would be pursued.

Council Housing (Defects)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will give the number and type of defective properties in each of the 75 local authorities, by name, which were given additional housing investment programme resources of £20 million under housing defects legislation on 12 May; and what is the number and type of defective properties still in the ownership of each of these local authorities.

Mrs. Rae: This is not readily available. We are updating the information, in the House Library, on the distribution of properties designated under the housing defects legislation, broken down by local authority and property type. I shall let the hon. Gentleman know as soon as that work has been completed. Meanwhile, the House Library contains local authorities' own HIP returns for 1987, giving total numbers of designated properties in local athority and private ownerships, though these figures are not broken down by house type.

Rating Reform

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his Department's latest estimate for the costs to local authorities associated with (a) the setting up and (b) the administration of the poll tax.

Mr. Howard: These are being considered in a study being undertaken by Price Waterhouse on which I am expecting a report shortly.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to receive the Price Waterhouse report on administering the community charge; and if he will announce the arrangements he is making to disseminate the report.

Mr. Ridley: I am expecting to receive the report this month and will announce arrangements for disseminating its findings when I have studied it.

Environmental Research and Protection

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures in real terms at 1987 prices for his Department's expenditure on environmental research and protection in total and broken down into expenditure related to (a) radioactive waste, (b) air pollution, (c) water and (d) countryside for each year since 1974 for which figures are available.

Mr. Ridley: The only information immediately available relates to 1985-86 and subsequent years. I shall provide information for earlier years, in so far as it is available without disproportionate effort, as soon as possible.

Following is the information:

£ million at 1987-88 prices

	1985-86	1986-87	1987-88
Radioactive waste	12·2	11·4	9·9
Air pollution	3·8	4·7	4·7

Figures prior to 1987-88 do not include expenditure by the Industrial Air Pollution Inspectorate which became part of Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution, within my Department on 1 April 1987.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give figures for the number of staff in his Department assigned to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution since 1987 and to (a) the Building Research Establishment, (b) statistical services and (c) water topics for each year since 1983, and for the total staff of his Department for each year since 1974 for which figures are available.

Mr. Ridley: The number of staff assigned to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution since 1987 is 149 at 1 April 1987 and 182 at 1 April 1988.

The numbers of staff assigned to the Building Research Establishment, statistical services and water topics for each year since 1983 are as follows:

Command	1 April 1983	1 April 1984	1 April 1985	1 April 1986	1 April 1987	1 April 1988

Statistical Services	132	132	124·5	121	120	121
Water Topics	90	93	93	101	106·5	109

The table shows total staff in DOE(C) for each year since 1979. The information is not readily available for earlier years.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Debt Provision

Mr. Tom Clarke: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table in the Official Report showing, for each year from 1973 to 1987, the average interest rate for six-month Eurodollar variable debt.

Mr. Lilley: The information requested is set out in the table.

Pound Sterling

Mr. Pike: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received from manufacturing industries in the last 12 months about the value of the pound; what industrial categories such representations have been received from; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lilley: My right hon. Friend has received a number of such representations.

Own Resources

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about early payment of non-value added tax own resources to the European Communities in May.

Mr. Brooke: The European Commission estimates that its spending obligations in June will exceed its available revenues under the provisional twelfths regime. In accordance with article 10(2) of Council regulation 2891/77, the Commission has requested member states to advance from June the payment of own resources, other than VAT, in respect of agricultural, sugar and isoglucose levies and customs duties collected by the Government on its behalf.

The Government are satisfied that this request is within the vires of article 10(2) and accordingly will make a payment today, 20 May, of £153 million from the Consolidated Fund under section 2(3) of the European Communities Act, 1972. The payment of levies and duties on 20 June will be reduced by the amount of the advance.

The article 10(2) facility does not affect the total amount which the Community is authorised to spend during the year. The Commission's request does not, therefore, involve any net addition to public expenditure.

VAT

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will seek to extend the category of those able to acquire a wheelchair exempt from value added tax to include elderly people who are unable to walk.

Mr. Lilley [holding answer 16 May 1988]: Wheelchairs are zero-rated for VAT purposes when supplied to a handicapped person. Anyone who is permanently unable to walk will qualify for this relief.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Attorney-General what is his policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with the Law Officers' Departments through the medium of the Welsh language.

The Attorney-General: It is the policy of the Lord Chancellor's Department to facilitate communication through the medium of the Welsh language, so far as is reasonably possible, and to that end Courts and offices for which the Lord Chancellor is responsible and which do not have access to a Welsh speaker are able to take advantage of an arrangement with the Welsh Office to provide a translation service.

My own Department has no facilities for translating communications received in Welsh, and in those circumstances my officials would seek advice from the Welsh Office.

Wright Memoirs

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Attorney-General if he will estimate the total current cost of the pursual of the legal cases to prevent publication of the Wright memoirs; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: In the "Spycatcher" litigation here and in Australia, New Zealand and Hong Kong, the total amount of costs expended to date by the Government is about £787,000.

Legal Aid

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the establishment, by grade, of the legal aid area office, Birmingham; and how many people are presently in place.

The Attorney-General: Staffing levels in the individual area offices are the responsibility of the legal aid administration of the Law Society. There is no formal establishment figure, but I understand that there are 79·5 members of staff in post with one unfilled vacancy at administrative officer level.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General what is the average time taken by the legal aid area office, Birmingham, to deal with applications for legal aid; and what were the equivalent figures one and two years ago.

The Attorney-General: The latest figures available are published in appendix 2G of the 37th legal aid annual reports. These show that, for legal aid area No. 6, it took an average 78·13 days (actual, not working) from receipt of a legal aid application to the issue of a certificate during the financial year 1986-87. The equivalent figure for 1985-86 was 50·89 days. Prior to 1985-86, figures for individual area offices are not available.

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Attorney-General when he expects the legal aid area office, Birmingham, to make a decision upon an application on behalf of Mr. John Walker, reference No. 06018805154 QB3 which was submitted in February and acknowledged on 15 March; and what are the reasons for the time taken to deal with this application.

The Attorney-General: I understand from the legal aid administration of the Law Society that Mr. Walker's application is being processed in the normal way, and that a decision will be made on the application imminently.

GEC/Marconi

Mr. Fraser: To ask the Attorney-General if he has decided whether a prosecution will take place following the investigation by the Ministry of Defence police into certain conduct of GEC/Marconi.

The Attorney-General: The investigation to which the hon. Member refers is not yet complete. It is being conducted in conjunction with the Serious Fraud Office. The director of the Serious Fraud Office will decide in due course whether any criminal proceedings should be instituted.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women were in prison mother-and-baby units on the most recent convenient date.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 13 May, there were 70 women in prison mother-and-baby units.

Mrs. Ann Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what proportion of sentenced male and female prisoners, respectively, on the most recent convenient date had not served a previous custodial sentence;

(2) what proportion of sentenced males and females under 21 years who were received into prison in the most recent convenient year had not previously served a custodial sentence;

(3) what proportion of sentenced males and females under 21 years in custody on the most recent convenient date had not previously served a custodial sentence;

(4) what proportion of sentenced males and females under 21 years received into custody in the most recent convenient year had not previously served a custodial sentence.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The information requested is not recorded centrally. The readily available statistics relate to all previous convictions and are published annually in "Prison Statistics England and Wales" (tables 3.5, 3.11, 4.3, 4.10, 5.3 and 5.10 of the latest volume, for 1986, (Cm. 210)), copies of which are in the Library.

Civil Defence (Regional Government)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recommendations he has received to improve procedures for the operation of regional government headquarters in wartime following the civil defence region No. 2 REGEX exercise; and if he will place a copy of the post-exercise report in the Library.

Mr. John Patten: The exercise is being evaluated, but it is not the practice to give details of these wartime arrangements.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Hurd: The Department has standing arrangements for translating and dealing with the small amount of correspondence received in Welsh.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to issue a circular to local authorities in Wales on the implications of the outcome of Newport's scheme to provide cheap television licences to pensioners.

Mr. Renton: No.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will circularise to all Welsh local authorities information advising them of the rules by which certain accommodation for elderly people can be adapted so that they can benefit from concessionary television licences.

Mr. Renton: No. Guidance on the requirements for eligibility for the accommodation for residential care licence is available on demand from the National TV Licence Records Office.

Mr. Poonawalla Hatimbhai

Mr. Soley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to give a substantive reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Hammersmith of 2 February, concerning the case of Mr. Poonawalla Hatimbhai (Home Office Ref.: P336477/2(s)); and if he will make a statement on the reasons for the delay in dealing with this case.

Mr. Renton: I replied to the hon Member's letter on 7 March indicating that further inquiries into Mr. Poonawalla's case would be required. These inquiries have now been completed, and a decision has been taken to grant the application. The time taken to deal with this case arose from the need to ensure that Mr. Poonawalla's application met the requirements of the immigration rules, and I am satisfied that there was no unnecessary delay.

National Lottery

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he has to amend the Lotteries Act 1976 to allow the establishment of a national lottery; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: We are aware of interest in the idea of a national lottery in the light of recent developments and will continue to keep the position under review.

Foreign Visitors

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many visitors by nationality (a) arrived in the United Kingdom, (b) were admitted, (c) were required to submit to secondary examination and (d) were refused leave to enter for each month from January 1987 to the nearest available date.

Mr. Renton [holding answer 3 May 1988]: I have today written to the hon. Member enclosing in tabular form the available information requested. A copy of the letter has been placed in the Library.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

UN Relief and Works Administration

Ms. Richardson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has as to which Governments in the most recent year for which the figures are available, contributed to the funds of the United Nations relief and works administration, and as to how much each such Government contributed.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is contained in annex I of the addendum to the report of the Commissioner General of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency of October 1987, UN Official Record No. A/42/13/Add I, copies of which have been deposited in the Library of the House.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the projects undertaken in the Falkland Islands to promote economic development which have received financial support from the United Kingdom and the extent of that support in each case to date at current and 1988 prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: Following is the information:

£ thousands

Project	Total expenditure to 31 March 1988
	At current	At 1987-88 prices (using GDP deflators)
Falkland Islands Development Corporation	7,234	7,588
Land Transfer	2,500	2,718
Port Stanley Electricity	3,855	4,243
Port Stanley Water	1,617	1,658
Fuel Depot	43	43
School Hostel	1,211	1,392
Foxbay Electricity	72	82
Stanley-Mount Pleasant Airport Road	1,359	1,562
Camptracks	197	200
Wool Mill	32	37
Computers	45	45
Technical Cooperation	8,180	8,918
Hospital	5,947	6,322
Stanley Airport Road	262	272
Brewster Housing	6,960	8,551
Stanley Roads	2,500	3,081
Repairs/Replacements	5,151	6,324

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what has been the total cost to date of civilian projects undertaken by the Government in each year since the end of the war in the Falkland Islands at both current and 1988 prices.

Mr. Chris Patten: Following is the information:

£000s

Financial year	Current prices	1987-88 Prices[2]
1982-83	9,429	11,842
1983-84	6,037	7,243

Vietnam

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response has been given to the request on 14 April from the Government of Vietnam for assistance with the serious food shortage arising from the recent drought in northern Vietnam.

Mr. Chris Patten: The request is under consideration by the European Community and international agencies. We shall not be making any bilateral response.

PRIME MINISTER

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if she will ensure that Ministers answering parliamentary questions by reference to previous answers enclose copies of such answers to the hon. Member asking the question.

The Prime Minister: My usual practice in such cases is to enclose copies of previous answers. I shall arrange for the hon. Gentleman's concern to be drawn to the attention of Departments generally.

Ministerial Statements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Prime Minister if she will set out her policy with regard to the making of statements about information reported on television, radio, or in the press and magazines.

The Prime Minister: Each case is decided on its merits.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister (1) what co-ordination takes place between all those Government Departments which operate in Wales concerning their use of the Welsh language when dealing with the public;

(2) what guidelines exist concerning the use of the Welsh language when dealing with the public by those Government Departments which have responsibility for aspects of the Government's work in Wales.

The Prime Minister: It is for each Department to decide how it responds to correspondence and deals with the public. Departments with offices in Wales seek to ensure that suitable arrangements exist so that letters written in Welsh are replied to in Welsh.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Prime Minister what is her policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with those offices for which she has direct ministerial responsibility through the medium of the Welsh language.

The Prime Minister: To refer the communication to the Welsh Office.

Mrs. Margaret Harris (Letter)

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Prime Minister when she expects to reply to Mrs. Margaret Harris, of the Helping Hands Homecare Agency, 61 Hilltop road, Worsley in response to questions raised in her letter dated 12 March.

The Prime Minister: Following my usual practice with regard to such matters, I have asked the relevant Department, Her Majesty's Customs and Excise, to reply to Mrs. Harris as soon as possible.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Child Mortality Rates

Mr. Tony Lloyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the child mortality rates both at birth and within a month of birth, in Trafford, Sheffield, Wandsworth, West Lambeth and North Lincolnshire health authorities; what is the number of registered nurses in special care baby units per 100 low birthweight births in those authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Currie: The information requested is in the table.

1986	Rates per 1,000 births		Registered nurses and midwives in special care baby units at 30 September 1986
District Health Authority	Still births per 1,000 live and still births	[1]All neo-natal deaths per 1,000 live births	[2]Whole-time equivalent per 100 low weight births
Trafford	5·9	4·2	[3]1·4
Sheffield	6·1	4·7	6·7
Wandsworth	4·4	4·1	7·5
West Lambeth	4·2	4·6	8·8
North Lincolnshire	6·7	3·1	[3]1·9

Sources: OPCS; DHSS Annual Census of NHS non-medical manpower.

[1] Neonatal deaths are deaths within 28 days.

[2] Calculated on unrounded whole-time equivalent staff in post and number of births.

[3] Trafford and North Lincolnshire health authorities export cases to other districts as they have limited neo-natal intensive care facilities. (North Lincolnshire has zero intensive care cots;

Social Security Reform

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has published or intends to publish statistics outlining the impact of the social security changes on the Afro-Caribbean and Asian communities.

Mr. Portillo: It is not possible to give the information requested. No information on ethnic minorities is contained in the national census, the annual family expenditure survey or DHSS administrative statistics.

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has published or intends to publish statistics outlining the impact of the social security changes on people resident in (a) the inner cities, (b) the Greater London area and (c) Brent, South constituency.

Mr. Portillo: I regret that statistically reliable estimates for the areas requested cannot be provided.

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if, further to his reply to the hon. Member for Davyhulme of 22 March, Official Report, column 88, he will make a statement on the progress made in amending the social security rules.

Mr. Portillo: We shall be considering proposals in the near future.

Departmental Staff (Burnley)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the designated staff level for his Department's Burnley office for the current year; how many staff were in post on 1 April; what were the comparable figures for 1987 and 1986; and what is the comparable work load position for the same period.

Mr. Portillo: The information requested is as follows:

Complement

	Staff
1986-87	212
1987-88	236
1988-89	210·5

Staff in Post

	Staff
1 April 1986	214·5
1 April 1987	211
1 April 1988	226·5

The latest caseload counts, based on a 100 per cent. count of all cases in action, and the corresponding figures for previous yars are as folows:

	17 December 1985	16 December 1986	17 November 1987
Supplementary benefits live load	16,308	16,772	15,701
Short term benefits live load	6,660	6,851	7,054

Comparable figures are not available for the full range of contributory benefits.

The 1987 work load figures are provisional and subject to amendment.

Direct comparisons between the numbers of staff and the live load are misleading as workloads vary considerably by type and duration of claim and the action that has to be taken. All these factors vary over time as a result of legislative, policy and procedural changes.

Income Support

Mr. Allen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services whether young people in full-time education who have become aged 19 years after 11 April are entitled to income support; and whether their parents are able to claim income support for them.

Mr. Portillo: People of 19 years and over in full-time education are treated as students for social security purposes. Disabled students, and lone-parent students, are eligible for income support throughout the year. Other students can claim only during the summer vacation. Parents cannot claim income support dependency additions for a person aged 19.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to correspond with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Portillo: Local offices of the Department in Wales will reply in Welsh to any letters received in that language.

There are facilities for local social security offices outside Wales to have any document or correspondence received in Welsh translated into English, but the reply will normally be in English.

Some social security benefits are administered centrally from offices outside Wales. Correspondence from Wales in Welsh received by any of these central offices is normally answered in Welsh.

Benefits Regulations

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services when his Department's leaflets P11, D11, G11 and H11, explaining the new regulations regarding benefits covering National Health Service treatment charges will be delivered to the two offices of his Department in Birkenhead.

Mr. Portillo: The delivery of leaflets P11, D11, G11 and H11 to local offices is scheduled for mid-July. In the meantime, people with inquiries should use the freeline social security service, which can be contacted by dialling 0800-666555 free of charge, or alternatively contact their local DHSS office.

Hospital Building

Mr. Higgins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that there is adequate consultation between the regional health authorities in planning the hospital building programmes; and if he will make it his policy that no proposal for new hospital building close to Worthing health authority district will be considered without taking fully into account the location of existing hospitals and the case for giving priority to the construction of phase II of the Worthing hospital.

Mrs. Currie: It is incumbent on all health authorities when planning capital schemes to take into account developments planned or in the pipeline in neighbouring authorities. In the case of Worthing and Brighton the authorities concerned are considering jointly the location of and services provided by existing hospitals in those districts and future plans for new building before submitting proposals to the Department.

Income Support

Mr. Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will make it his policy that the compensatory element to be built into the April 1989 income support rates to reflect 20 per cent. of the average community charge will be, in the case of a single person aged 18 to 24 years inclusive, the same as that for a single person aged 25 years or over;

(2) if he will make it his policy that the compensatory element to be built into the April 1989 income support rates to reflect 20 per cent. of the average community charge be paid to a full uprating of the remainder of the income support rates, according to the movement of the retail prices index exclusive of housing costs over the relevant measurement period.

Mr. Portillo: Decisions regarding the uprating of income support and the compensation for the liability to meet 20 per cent. of the average community charge will be taken in the autumn.

Pensions

Mrs. Beckett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to which countries in Europe, other than the United Kingdom, pensions are paid (a) at a higher rate to married men than to single men or (b) to married women by virtue of their husbands' contributions.

Mr. Scott [holding answer 18 May 1988]: Among the member states of the European Community married men are paid higher pensions than single men in Belgium, Greece, Ireland, the Netherlands, Portugal and Spain. However, the rate of increase is in several cases very small. In Denmark a married couple receive a higher pension than the single person rate only if both partners qualify for a pension. The United Kingdom and Gibraltar are the only parts of the European Community in which a separate pension is paid to a wife by virtue of her husband's contributions.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Companies

Mr. Gregory: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what information he has as to which companies have their headquarters in the Yorkshire and Humberside region and have subsidiaries abroad.

Mr. Atkins: There are 52,171 companies which have their registered office address in the Yorkshire and Humberside region. The information concerning foreign subsidiaries could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

BP (Kuwaiti Shareholding)

Mr. Gould: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what action he proposes to take, pending a report from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission, in the event that the Kuwaiti Investment Office increases its shareholding in BP by taking its dividend in the form of additional shares.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In accordance with normal practice, the Office of Fair Trading has invited the Kuwait Investment Office to give an undertaking, pending the outcome of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission inquiry, that it will not acquire additional BP shares.

Mobile Communications

Mr. Teddy Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster why Mr. Arthur Bird of 3 Ashanti close, Shoeburyness, has been advised that the allocation of a radio frequency cannot be given for his taxi firm for 10 weeks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 17 May 1988]: The assignment of frequencies for private mobile radio users is a complex process. At present, over 1,000 cases a month are being received and there is a backlog of work. Steps are being taken to deal with this backlog, and new applications are now generally taking less than six weeks. I will write to the hon. Member about the options available to those who have an urgent need for mobile communications.

Furnishings (Fire Safety)

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what account was taken in drawing up the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations of the relevant European Economic Community standards.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 19 May 1988]: I am not aware of any such standards.

Dr. Cunningham: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if his Department has had any discussions with the European Commission about the draft Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 19 May 1988]: Several such discussions have taken place; the most recent was in Brussels on 17 May.

Departmental Research Establishments

Mr. Blair: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what is the regional distribution of his Department's research establishments.

Mr. Butcher [holding answer 19 May 1988]: The distribution is as follows:

Scotland

National Engineering Laboratory at East Kilbride.

South East Region

Warren Spring Laboratory at Stevenage.
Laboratory of the Government Chemist at Waterloo (London).
National Physical Laboratory at Teddington.
National Weights and Measures Laboratory at Teddington.

ENERGY

Ministerial Statements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy towards making statements in Parliament on matters raised by television or radio broadcasts or in the press and magazine articles.

Mr. Parkinson: Each case is decided on its merits.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what is his policy with regard to dealing with those individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Parkinson: My Energy Efficiency Office can deal with inquiries in Welsh and issues selected publications in Welsh. If a wish emerged from individuals and bodies in Wales to communicate in Welsh with other parts of my Department, I would explore whether suitable arrangements could be made.

THORP (Contracts)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy what proportion of the current contracts signed for THORP at Sellafield with non-United Kingdom companies is allocated for the expenditure to be incurred by (a) United Kingdom Nirex Ltd., (b) its successor body if reorganised under privatisation and (c) British Nuclear Fuels plc for the long-term storage or disposal of (i) low-level wastes and (ii) intermediate-level wastes to be retained in the United Kingdom after reprocessing.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Since 1976 BNFL's contracts for the reprocessing of overseas spent fuel have contained options for the return of wastes. Contracts signed before 1976 do not contain such options and therefore cover the costs of long-term storage and disposal of low and intermediate level wastes. I understand from BNFL that the costs of such storage and disposal are estimated to be less than 5 per cent. of the total costs associated with current contracts signed for THORP without return of waste options.

Coal Mining Subsidence

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy whether he will extend the date for receipt of evidence submitted to his Department for its consultation paper, "Coal Mining Subsidence Compensation: Proposals For Legislation" until the autumn.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No; the deadline of three months from the issuing of the paper is a reasonable time to allow interested parties to comment.

The Department is, however, always pleased to have the views of those with an interest in coal mining subsidence and where possible to take these into account.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Energy if he will direct British Coal to make available to the owners of properties thought to be damaged by coal mining subsidence reports commissioned by the corporation with outside agencies or consultancies.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No. Such reports belong to British Coal. This is a matter for the corporation.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Irish Language

Mr. McGrady: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the total number of students in teacher training institutions who are currently studying Irish as part of their teacher training course.

Dr. Mawhinney: Forty-eight.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mrs. Rumbold: Generally, it is the practice of the Department to respond in English where a communication is received in another language, but so far as is reasonably practicable, the Department would seek to respond both in English and Welsh to correspondence received in the Welsh language. There is no facility in the Department for dealing orally with questions raised in that language.

Haberdashers' Aske's Schools

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Lewisham, Deptford, 16 May, Official Report, column 319, what advice has been given to the governing body of Haberdashers' Aske's schools about entitlement to redundancy payments of staff of their Lewisham schools consequent upon any change of status to a city technology college.

Mrs. Rumbold: My officials have given no advice to the governing body of the Haberdashers' Aske's schools on this subject.

Schools Councils

Mr. Oppenheim: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement on the setting up of the shadow National Curriculum Council and the shadow School Examinations and Assessment Council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: During the debate on Second Reading of the Education Reform Bill, on 1 December 1987, at column 776, I announced my intention to set up the National Curriculum Council (NCC) and the School Examinations and Assessment Council (SEAC) in shadow form during the passage of the Bill. Establishment of the councils in this way, which is without prejudice to parliamentary approval of the provisions in the Bill relating to the creation of statutory councils, will enable the bodies to begin planning for implementation of the national curriculum and its associated assessment arrangements, and for the approval of qualifications and syllabuses provided for under the Bill. In particular, it will enable the shadow NCC to plan for consideration of, and consultations on, the reports of the curriculum working groups in mathematics and science due at the end of June.

I am pleased to say that Mr. Duncan Graham, who is currently the chief executive of Humberside county council and formerly chief education officer of Suffolk, has agreed to be chairman and chief executive of the shadow NCC. Mr. Philip Halsey, deputy secretary in the Department of Education and Science until his retirement earlier this month, has agreed to be chairman and chief executive of the shadow SEAC. I am also appointing the following people as members of the shadow councils:

National Curriculum Council

Professor Paul J. Black, OBE, PhD: Professor of Science Education, Kings College, London and Head of the Centre for Educational Studies.

Mr. Malcolm Brigg: TVEI Regional Adviser, Northern Region.

Ms. Judith Chaplin: Head of Institute of Directors' Policy Unit.

Mrs. Daphne Gould: Head of Mulberry Girls' School, Tower Hamlets.

Dr. Hilary Nicolle: Headmistress of Tiffin Girls' School, Kingston-upon-Thames.

Mr. Colin Smith MBE: Headmaster, Delaval County Middle School, Northumberland.

Mr. Christopher J. Webb: Principal, Handsworth Technical College, Birmingham.

Mr. J. Peter Whitehouse: Industrial Consultant.

School Examinations and Assessment Council

Mr. Ivor H. Cohen: Chairman of Remploy Ltd.

Mr. Richard Daughtery: Dean of the Faculty of Educational Studies, University College, Swansea.

Mr. John Day: Secretary-General of the Associated Examining Board.

Mr. Neil Fitton: Director of Education, Cheshire LEA.

Dr. Arthur Hearnden: General Secretary of the Independent Schools Joint Council.

Dr. Stephen Nepaulsingh: Deputy Headmaster, Heath Park High School, Wolverhampton.

Dr. Margaret Rayner: Vice-Principal, St. Hilda's College, Oxford.
Ms. Hilary Steedman: Senior Research Officer at the National Institute of Economic and Social Research.
Mrs. Elizabeth Tarr: Head, Thornbury Primary School, Plymouth.
Ms. Kathleen Tattersall: Joint Secretary of the Northern Examinations Authority. Secretary of the North-West Regional Examinations Board.
Mr. Christopher J. Webb: Principal, Handsworth Technical College, Birmingham.
Mr. J. Peter Whitehouse: Industrial consultant.

They have been chosen after a good deal of consultation with interests directly concerned with the work of the two councils, and between them reflect a wide range of knowledge and experience of educational matters. I am grateful to all for their willingness to serve.

I have chosen not to fill all the places available on each council—15 if the Bill is passed in its present form—because I wish to consider further appointments in the light of the councils' early experience and of further comment about interests which should be reflected. But I shall be seeking to make an early further appointment to the NCC to bring to bear more knowledge and experience of primary education, and I also intend to ensure that people knowledgeable about special educational needs are appointed to both bodies.

Subject to the Education Reform Bill completing its passage through Parliament and receiving Royal Assent, I expect to confirm the appointments to their respective councils of the chairmen/chief executives and of the members at a later date.

The School Curriculum Development Committee and the Secondary Examinations Council, which will respectively be replaced by the NCC and SEAC, will continue their present work for the time being, but will be formally wound up in the autumn after Royal Assent. I am very grateful to their members, and to their chairmen, Professor Roger Blin-Stoyle and Sir Wilfred Cockcroft, for the valuable service they have given and for continuing to serve until the new councils are formally established.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Bangladesh

Mrs. Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the cost of the United Kingdom military training assistance scheme relating to Bangladesh.

Mrs. Chalker: We meet the cost of providing a three-man team to help with instruction at the Bangladesh defence services command and staff college. In addition, we meet the cost of attendance by Bangladeshi students at a small number of military training courses in the United Kingdom. It is not our practice to disclose the cost of assistance to individual countries.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Government have offered any financial assistance to Falkland Islanders who wish to emigrate from the islands; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: We have not offered any financial assistance to Falkland Islanders wishing to emigrate from the islands. The FICZ has increased job opportunities in the islands over the last 18 months. The 1986 census showed an increase in population for the first time since 1930.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the present permanent population of the Falkland Islands; what was the population in 1980; and what proportion of the present population are native to the islands.

Mr. Eggar: At the last census held on 16 November 1986, the population of the Falkland Islands was 1,916. In 1980 the population was 1,813. The 1986 census figures established that at that time 67 per cent. of the population was born in the Falkland Islands.

Ministerial Statements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy towards making statements on matters raised by television or radio broadcasts or published in the press and magazines.

Mr. Eggar: Each case is decided on its merits.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Eggar: We would make the necessary arrangements for the translation of any communication received in the Welsh language.

Gibraltar (Shootings)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his statement on 7 March, Official Report, column 22, on the shootings in Gibraltar, whether full information on the bullet wounds inflicted on the terrorists will be made available by the British Army and the commissioner of the Gibraltar police to the coroner; and whether it is the Government's intention to release this information to the public when the inquest has been completed.

Mrs. Chalker: It will be for the coroner to decide to whom he makes available the evidence laid before the inquest.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, further to his statement of 7 March on the shootings in Gibraltar, Official Report, column 21, to whom the police commissioner addressed his request for military assistance; and when.

Mrs. Chalker: I have nothing to add to the statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend on 7 March.

Albania

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on current relations with Albania.

Mrs. Chalker: We have no diplomatic relations with Albania but a British trade mission has recently visited that country and there are other unofficial contacts.

In 1980, we offered to establish diplomatic relations with Albania without preconditions. That offer remains open, but unfortunately the Albanians have not taken it up. FCO officials held talks with Albanian officials in 1985, with a view to finding mutually acceptable solutions to the outstanding problems. These talks did not lead to agreement, but we should be glad to resume discussion if this seemed likely to lead to a satisfactory outcome.

SCOTLAND

Cavendish Memoirs

Mr. Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the current cost of the pursual of the legal case to prevent publication of the Cavendish memoirs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Proceedings in Scotland in relation to Anthony Cavendish's book "Inside Intelligence" have been brought by the Lord Advocate on behalf of the Government. Those proceedings have not been concluded and in these circumstances it would be inappropriate for any estimate to be made as to the current cost of the pursual of the proceedings. My right hon. and learned Friend therefore does not intend to make any statement in relation to the matter.

Radioactivity (Monitoring)

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for East Lothian on 16 May, Official Report, column 347, if he will list the 26 sites for radioactivity monitoring stations in Scotland; and if it is his intention to make information collected at these stations available to the public.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The location of a number of the 26 monitoring stations to be established in Scotland has yet to be decided. Those 18 sites which will be established this year under phase 1 of the scheme are as listed. (I regret that my reply of 16 May erroneously gave this number as 20.) The locations of the remaining eight sites required to complete the network will be decided later this year and their installation and the automation of all 26 sites are expected within the next two years.

The information collected at these stations will be made available to local authorities and to other interested bodies or members of the public.

Paisley

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received regarding the delay in the commencement of the Paisley town centre development; and what response he has made.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have received a number of representations on behalf of a company which has indicated an interest in acquiring land purchased with public funds and owned by Paisley college of technology in order to facilitate a projected development in Paisley town centre. In reply I have explained that the site in question will be disposed of by open tender; and that the Scottish Education Department will not stand in the way of any arrangement which is in the interests of the college and which secures a proper return on the sale of a publicly-acquired asset.

Paisley College (Land Drainage)

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) when he last met the governors of Paisley college to discuss the situation regarding land owned by the college in Storie street, Paisley; what was the outcome of these discussions; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what advice his Department gave, and on what date, to the governors of Paisley college regarding the land at Storie street, Paisley, which is in the ownership of the college; what action was taken by the governors; and if he will make a statement;

(3) what plans he has to discuss with the governors of Paisley college the anticipated completion date for the disposal of the land owned by the college at Storie street, Paisley; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: I have had no discussions with the governors of Paisley college about the land owned by the college in Storie street. However, officials of the Scottish Education Department have on a number of occasions in the last few months had discussions about the land with senior management of the college. They offered advice on various options for marketing the land so as to secure the best return on a publicly-acquired asset. I understand that the land will be exposed for sale by tender shortly.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he had to assist the town of Paisley in celebration of the 500th anniversary of its formation by grant of Royal Charter during 1988; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: None, nor has any such assistance been sought. My right hon. and learned Friend would like, however, to extend to the citizens of Paisley every good wish in this their 500th anniversary year.

Mr. Allen Adams: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimates he has of the number of jobs which will be created by the development of the Paisley shopping centre (a) during construction, and (b) when completed.

Mr. Lang: The project, which is due to begin early next year, is expected to create 200 construction jobs. It is estimated that it will provide 500 retail jobs when completed in 1991.

Sheepmeat

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will outline the procedures adopted following the discovery of sheep with bequerel readings in excess of 1,000 per kilogram to stop (a) the tested sheepmeat carcases concerned and (b) sheepmeat from carcases in the same batch entering the food chain.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Since there have been no cases of the discovery in slaughterhouses of sheep for sale with readings in excess of 1,000 bq/kg it has not been necessary for any such procedures to be adopted.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what time elapsed from the sampling of sheep at slaughterhouses under the Food and Environment Act to the results becoming available.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: On average four days.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when the monitoring of sheep at slaughterhouses under the Food and Environment Protection Act was introduced; and if this was by live monitoring.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The monitoring of caesium levels in sheep at slaughterhouses was introduced on 28 May 1986. It serves as a check on the effectiveness of movement and slaughter restrictions and is undertaken on carcases.

ENVIRONMENT

Nuclear Waste (Sea Dumping)

Mr. Moss: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how he proposes to ensure that sub-seabed burial of low and medium level nuclear waste will conform with recent resolutions of the contracting parties to the London dumping convention; whether it would require London dumping convention approval; and what assessment he has made as to whether it would involve levels of technology as yet untried and untested for that purpose.

Mr. Moynihan: There are no current proposals to bury low-level or intermediate-level radioactive waste under the sea-bed. Any future proposals would, of course, have to satisfy all national and international safety requirements.

Water Authorities

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many staff were employed by each English water authority at the latest available date.

Mr. Moynihan: As of 31 March 1988, the numbers of staff employed by each regional water authority was:

	Staff
Anglian	5,102
Northumbrian	1,459
North West	7,936
Severn Trent	8,174
Southern	3,162
South West	1,958
Thames	9,210
Wessex	1,891
Yorkshire	4,981

Ofwat

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals his Department is currently making with regard to the protective powers of Ofwat; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The conditions of appointment of the water utility companies will provide a framework of protection to be operated by the water services office under powers to be provided in legislation to be laid before Parliament. A series of policy letters, copies of which will be placed in the Library, was announced in the answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Northampton, North (Mr. Marlow) on 8 March, at column 121. The letters will give details of the regulatory framework. The first dealt with the regulation of charges by the new water utility companies.

Water Supply

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to how much the Thames water authority spent in each of the last five years on controlling the levels of nitrites and nitrates in rivers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My Department does not hold such information.

Ms. Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has as to (a) nitrate levels, and (b) nitrite levels in the rivers within the Thames water authority in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moynihan: The information held by the Department on nitrite and nitrate levels in rivers within Thames water authority over the last five years is as follows:

Radioactive Waste

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what representations will be made by his Department at the international conference on low and intermediate-level nuclear waste management organised by the International Atomic Energy Agency and Commission of the European Communities to be held in Stockholm from 16 to 20 May;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report all those United Kingdom participants referred by his Department for the International Atomic Energy Agency Commission of the European Communities joint international symposium on low and intermediate-level nuclear wastes to be held in Stockholm on 16 to 20 May; and what specific departmental representation is arranged.

Mr. Moynihan: Twenty five United Kingdom delegates attended the IAEA/CEC symposium on low and intermediate level waste held in Stockholm 16-20 May. The following organisations were represented:

HM Inspectorate of Pollution; HM Industrial Pollution Inspectorate; United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority; Central Electricity Generating Board; South of Scotland Electricity Board; British Nuclear Fuels plc; National Radiological Protection Board; Taywood Engineering Ltd; Associated Nuclear Services; and the Open university.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what physical checks are made on consignments of radioactive wastes on arrival at the Drigg dump near Sellafield to ensure that the packaged waste contains only what Her Majesty's Pollution Inspectorate authorisations allow.

Mr. Moynihan: BNF plc is responsible for quality assurance monitoring at the Drigg site. Her Majesty's Inspectors of Pollution also carry out quality checking. Material can be removed to an independent laboratory for analysis by inspectors.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total radioactivity content in becquerels of nuclear wastes currently deposited at the Drigg dump near Sellafield; and what authorisations exist for disposal up to the year 2010.

Mr. Moynihan: 470 terabecquerels were disposed of at Drigg up to 1 January 1986. An authorisation controlling the disposal of solid radioactive waste to the Drigg site was issued on 1 February 1988. It will be reviewed by 1992.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his policy towards the import by the United Kingdom of foreign nuclear wastes in low and intermediate categories for (a) treatment, incineration and compaction and (b) disposal, once Nirex has finalised its search for a suitable deep disposal site.

Mr. Moynihan: No low and intermediate level waste arising from anywhere in the world is imported into the United Kingdom. Any proposals to do so would be considered on its merits, with a view to ensuring that neither the public nor the environment should be placed at any risk.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any consideration of planning gains to be offered to the residents of Drigg and Carleton in Cumbria near Sellafield in the light of the planning and environmental blight brought about by the radioactive waste dump at Drigg; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: My right hon. Friend has made no consideration of planning gains in the Drigg area. This is a matter for BNFL and the local authorities.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the total plutonium content (a) by weight and (b) by radioactivity content of plutonium contamination material currently deposited at the Drigg dump near Sellafield; and if he will make a statement on the extractability of the plutonium by current methods or methods known to his Department presently under development.

Mr. Moynihan: I understand from BNFL that there are about 500 g of plutonium dispersed throughout 700,000 cu m of low-level radioactive waste currently deposited at Drigg. The radioactive content of this is estimated to be approximately 25 tera becqerels. Much research has been carried out into methods to remove plutonium from wastes prior to disposal; however, none has proved to be worth while.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to initiate a special development order to permit British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. to conduct borehole testing as part of suitability evaluation for deep disposal of nuclear waste at the Sellafield site, in light of the rejection of the planning application for such a test from British Nuclear Fuels plc by the Copeland borough council planning committee.

Mr. Moynihan: I have at present no plans to initiate a special development order.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of radioactive wastes currently deposited at the Drigg dump near Sellafield arise from contracts made with foreign companies or Governments; and what proportion of the volume of wastes expected to be deposited at the Drigg dump by the year 2010 will be of foreign origin.

Mr. Moynihan: Approximately 4 per cent. by volume of the radioactive waste disposed of by burial into the ground at the Drigg disposal site up to the end of 1987 arose from British Nuclear Fuel's contracts with foreign customers. This percentage is not expected to change significantly in the period to 2010.

Ministerial Statements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy regarding making statements in Parliament on matters raised by television or radio programmes or in the press and magazines articles.

Mr. Ridley: Each case is decided on its merits.

Heat Exchangers (Nuclear Plants)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his current policy towards the disposal of heat exchangers from decommissioned nuclear power plants.

Mr. Moynihan: The power plant operator is responsible for management of decommissioned wastes. I expect him to make proposals for safe disposal to Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Pollution who will assess them against radiological and environmental criteria set out in the HMSO booklet "Disposal facilities on land for low and intermediate level radioactive wastes: Principles for the protection of the human environment." If I am satisfied with the proposal and the assessment the operator will be authorised to proceed.

Mustard Gas (Clwyd)

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to be able to publish the report commissioned from the laboratory of the Government Chemist by the Property Services Agency in 1985 on mustard gas contamination at Rhydymwyn in Clwyd.

Mr. Moynihan: The report commissioned from the Government Chemist to assess the level of mustard gas contamination on this site was not prepared nor intended for publication.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his policy with regard to dealing with those individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Ridley: The Department's policy is to answer communications in languages other than English in the writer's language wherever possible. Normally, unless an urgent reply is required. any correspondence to the Department that is written in Welsh will be answered in Welsh.

Office of Water Regulation

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how his Department proposes that the members of the Office of Water Regulation will be selected; what the composition of the Office of Water Regulation will be; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: Planning for the establishment of the water services office is still at an early stage, but we expect to recruit a suitably experienced and qualified Director General of Water Services. The staff of the office is likely to be a mixture of civil servants on loan from their Departments and specialist staff recruited on contract from elsewhere.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what resources his Department intends to place at the disposal of the Office of Water Regulation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: The water service offices is likely to be a non-ministerial department, the Exchequer costs of which will be financed by licence fees from the utility companies which will hold appointments as water and sewerage undertakers. The Department will ensure that it is established with adequate resources to commence its regulatory tasks; thereafter this will be the reponsibility of the Director General of Water Services.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers the Office of Water Regulation will have with regard to the level of charges paid by water customers/users.

Mr. Moynihan: The charges of water utility companies will be limited in accordance with one of their conditions of appointment, which will be administered by the Director General of Water Services. The arrangements for the regulation of charges are described in a policy letter dated 3 March 1988 (reference WRP1), copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Water Industry (Privatisation)

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what his Department estimates the severance costs will be to the water industry, or to any other body covering these costs of breaking up the water industry into private companies and a National Rivers Authority; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moynihan: No information is yet available. Following Royal Assent to the Public Utility Transfers and Water Charges Act, water authorities have been asked to provide outline schemes of organisation on the separation of their businesses into a utility and NRA component. These will identify, inter alia, any costs of the necessary reorganisation. The National Rivers Authority Advisory Committee will be scrutinising these restructuring proposals very carefully.

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers the National Rivers Authority will have with regard to monitoring and influencing levels of capital expenditure by privatised water companies on their assets.

Mr. Moynihan: Regulatory decisions taken by the National Rivers Authority in respect of abstraction and impounding licences and discharge consents may influence levels of capital expenditure by privatised water companies. The expenditure needed will be taken into account by the Director General of Water Services in reviewing the prices which companies may charge their customers. In addition, the NRA will have an interest in the costs which companies incur in maintaining and operating river-regulating reservoirs, for which the NRA will pay them a charge.

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many water pollution incidents were recorded in each English water authority in each of the last three years.

Mr. Moynihan: The numbers of water pollution incidents reported by English water authorities in the last three years for which figures are available are:

	1984-85	1985-86	1986-87
Anglian	1,557	1,707	1,468
Northumbrian	654	722	729
North West	2,241	2,202	2,480
Severn Trent	4,372	4,500	4,497
Southern	1,574	1,668	1,743
South West	1,685	1,718	2,075
Thames	2,486	2,695	2,890
Wessex	1,125	993	1,332
Yorkshire	1,536	2,006	2,262

The Water Authorities Association will publish figures for 1987-88 later this year.

WALES

Water Pollution

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the number of water pollution incidents recorded for each of the last three years in Wales.

Mr. Grist: The Welsh water authority's annual water quality report shows the reported water pollution incidents for the years 1984-85, 1985-86 and 1986-87 were 1,418, 1,681 and 1,619 respectively.

The report for 1987-88 is expected to be issued in the near future.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he is now in a position to be able to announce the outcome of the consultation process undertaken by his Department during 1986-87 concerning the desirability of initiating new Welsh language legislation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 25 April, at columns 6-7.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he expects the evidence submitted to his Department in response to its consultation exercise on the desirability of new Welsh language legislation carried out in 1986 and 1987 to be made available to the public for inspection.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 15 January at column 426.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what detailed evaluation has been carried out by his Department of the responses to its consultation exercise on the desirability of new Welsh language legislation carried out in 1986 and 1987; in what form he expects such evaluation to be made available to the public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Substantive comments have been individually considered in depth and the main thrust of these will be reflected in the announcement which my right hon. Friend hopes to make shortly on his plans for action with regard to the Welsh language.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will consider publishing a White Paper on reform of the legal status of the Welsh language; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: No.

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Caernarfon of Friday 11 March, Official Report, column 367, why his Department has not compiled a list of those persons, bodies and associations which submitted evidence to his Department on the desirability of new Welsh language legislation during the consultation exercise carried out in 1986 and 1987; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to him on 11 March, at column 367.

Nursery Nurses (Clwyd)

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many qualified nursery nurses are employed by each of the local education authorities in Wales; if he will grant extra funds to Clwyd education authority so as to avoid cutbacks in nursery nurse numbers in the junior schools of Clwyd; if he will meet the Clwyd parent-teacher associations to discuss the work of nursery nurses in Clwyd; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of qualified nursery assistants employed by each local education authority in Wales as at September 1987 is as follows:

Local Education Authority	Number
Clwyd	309
Dyfed	152
Gwent	339
Gwynedd	64
Mid Glamorgan	341
Powys	74
South Glamorgan	105
West Glamorgan	260

It is for Clwyd local education authority to determine its own priorities within the total resources available to it.

We have no plans to meet the Clwyd parent-teachers associations.

Opencast Mining

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he will prepare regional coalfield statements in Wales concerning opencast coalmining; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Walker: In accordance with the code of practice produced by the local authority associations, British Coal Corporation has agreed to prepare a national assessment of the market requirement for opencast coal.

Subsequently, British Coal will prepare regional coalfield statements which will indicate the regional impact of the national assessment, for discussion with the mineral planning authorities in each region.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how he will ensure that local people, as well as county mineral planning authorities, will be involved in opencast mining applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Grist: The Government believe that local people should be given the opportunity to make their views known both to the industry and to the mineral planning authorities. Thus the law requires an applicant for planning permission for opencast mining to advertise his proposals in the local press and on a notice to be displayed on the site. The application cannot then be determined for a minimum of 21 days during which members of the public and anyone with an interest in the land may make representations to the mineral planning authority. In addition, where proposals relate to large sites or sites that may be worked over many years the Government encourage the industry to discuss the proposals at an early stage with the local community by holding public exhibitions and meetings.

Homelessness

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what further action he proposes to take to combat homelessness in Wales.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 16 May 1988]: There are specific proposals in the Housing Bill which aim to increase the supply of rented accommodation for those in greatest housing need.

Housing

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses in Wales are classified as unfit to live in.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 16 May 1988]: The results of the Welsh house condition survey show that in 1986 the number of dwellings in Wales classified as unfit was 79,700. In 1981 there were 90,000 unfit dwellings.

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses in Wales lack (a) one or more basic amenity, (b) an inside toilet and (c) a fixed bath.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 16 May 1988]: The results of the Welsh house condition survey show that in 1986 there were 47,600 dwellings in Wales lacking one or more basic amenity, 20,800 dwellings in Wales lacking a WC inside the dwelling, and 16,300 dwellings in Wales lacking a fixed bath or shower inside the dwelling. These figures show a significant improvement on the situation in 1981 when 83,600 lacked one or more basic amenity, 55,000 lacked a WC inside the dwelling, and 44,300 lacked a fixed bath in a bathroom.

House Condition Survey

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give the cost of compiling the latest Welsh house condition survey; and what assessment he has made of its value to his Department.

Mr. Grist [holding answer 17 May 1988]: The 1986 Welsh house condition survey was the first undertaken at the district level and provides both the Department and district councils in Wales with a uniquely detailed picture of the Welsh housing stock, and with a large amount of social data about householders. The report identifies the considerable progress we have made in improving housing conditions in Wales and also highlights the areas with outstanding housing problems. It will assist us in determining priorities and financial allocations. The cost of the survey was £1·6 million. The value of the survey will be determined by the extent to which local authorities and others make use of the results.

DEFENCE

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Boateng: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals he has to extend monitoring of equal opportunities in Her Majesty's forces.

Mr. Freeman: None. I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's evidence to the Defence Committee. The Committee's report (HC 391) was published on 25 April and we shall be responding to it shortly.

Procurement Contracts

Mr. Wallace: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many current procurement contracts valued at more than £10 million are currently behind schedule.

Mr. Sainsbury: The Ministry has a well-developed system which ensures that all projects running seriously behind schedule are brought to the notice of senior officials and, for major projects, Ministers. Information about major projects is also regularly made available to the Public Accounts and Defence Select Committees. The detailed information requested, however, would require a special survey and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Falkland Islands

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what has been the total cost of the defence of the Falkland Islands since the end of the conflict; and what percentage of the expenditure involved represents payments to United Kingdom-based contractors in respect of construction works and so on.

Mr. Freeman: The additional cost of maintaining a garrison in the Falkland Islands from April 1983 to the end of the last financial year is estimated to be £1,544 million (including campaign costs in 1982-83 but excluding residual campaign costs subsequently). Approximately one third of this amount has been spent on capital works projects. The placing and management of works contracts is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the annual cost of defending the Falklands.

Mr. Freeman: The additional cost of maintaining a garrison in the Falkland Islands in 1988-89 is estimated to be £97 million. This includes all extra costs relating to the Falklands garrison; it excludes residual campaign costs, and those personnel, equipment and other costs which would be incurred in the absence of the Falklands commitment.

Ministerial Statements

Dr. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy towards making statements in Parliament on matters raised by television or radio or in the press and magazine articles.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Each case is decided on its merits.

Deaf Persons

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people employed in his Department are (a) deaf without speech, (b) deaf with speech, and (c) hard of hearing, for the latest date for which figures are available; and what percentage this represents of all employees in his Department.

Mr. Sainsbury: I regret the information requested is not held centrally. However, action is being taken within the Ministry of Defence to set up a central database on people with disabilities.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Sainsbury: Written presentations to the Ministry of Defence in any language other than English are translated within the Department or sent to commercial agencies for translation if resources are not available.

It is normal practice to reply in English, the working language of the Department, irrespective of the language used by the original inquiry.

P and O Staff (Training)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training facilities are provided at Deal barracks for staff of the P and O company; and when such facilities were first made available.

Mr. Freeman: No training facilities are being provided at Deal barracks for staff of the P and O company. The Royal Marines school of music owns a swimming pool outside the camp which is regularly made available to the general public and commercial organisations—including the cross-Channel operators. P and O has been using the pool from time to time since 9 May and I understand that it has carried out some staff training in life saving duties there.

Defence Estimates

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the cost of compiling the Defence Estimates White Paper.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The estimated costs of producing the 1988 Statement on the Defence Estimates were approximately £63,000.

Fishermen (Compensation)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what steps he proposes to take to compensate fishermen whose boats and gear are damaged or sunk after being ensnared by submarines at sea.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is already a well-established procedure by which fishermen may claim compensation when their boats or gear are damaged or sunk by Her Majesty's ships, including submarines. Every incident reported is carefully investigated and compensation is paid where it is shown that the Ministry of Defence is legally liable.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what measures he has introduced to improve the employment prospects of disabled persons in the armed forces.

Mr. Freeman: No new measures have been initiated. It is not our practice to recruit disabled people and the nature of employment in the armed forces is such that it is not often possible to continue to employ service personnel disabled whilst in the forces, though individual cases are considered on their merits.

HIV Screening

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce HIV screening for pilots of fighter aircraft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No. It is not Ministry of Defence policy to impose compulsory HIV screening within any area of the armed forces. This accords with the current overall Government policy on employment.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Food and Environment Protection Act

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library copies of all the correspondence sent to farmers affected by restrictions under the Food and Environment Protection Act since 20 June 1986.

Mr. Donald Thompson: I am placing in the Library of the House a copy of the correspondence sent by my officials to all farmers in England affected by restrictions under the Food and Environment Protection Act 1985.

Badgers

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what progress is being made on the development of a tuberculosis vaccine for badgers; what research is presently carried out with that aim; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Donald Thompson [holding answer 19 May 1988]: Research work on the development of a reliable vaccine for use in badgers has been carried out at the Middlesex hospital. Proposals for field trials to determine the efficacy of the vaccine and a suitable method of administration are under active and careful consideration.

EMPLOYMENT

Self-employment

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment whether the fact that a self-employed worker on the enterprise allowance scheme or otherwise has only one initial client for his services constitutes a valid reason for denying or refusing such work a self-employed status.

Mr. Cope: The employment status of workers for tax and national insurance purposes is determined on a case by case basis. The number of clients will be one of the factors taken into account in deciding whether a person is self-employed.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what estimates he has of the number of employees who would become self-employed if employers and workers were able to agree such status, free from existing legal constraints.

Mr. Cope: Employers and employees are, in general, free to agree whatever contractual arrangements they wish. For tax and national insurance purposes, self-employed status applies only to those people who are genuinely taking the business risks associated with self-employment. We can make no estimate of the numbers who might be affected by a change in these arrangements.

Mr. David Howell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases in which employed or self-employed status was in dispute came to the attention of officials in his Department in 1987.

Mr. Cope: Questions about employment or self-employment status are primarily a matter for the Inland Revenue and Department of Health and Social Security. However, Ministers received 30 representations about cases concerning employment status in 1987. This excludes cases and inquiries handled by the small firms service.

Mines and Quarries Act 1954

Mr. Illsley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what responses he has received to the consultative document entitled "Restrictions on Employment of Young People and the Removal of Sex Discrimination in Legislation which refers to the Mines and Quarries Act 1954"; and whether these will be placed in the Library.

Mr. Nicholls: My Department has received a total of 81 responses to the consultative document from various organisations and individuals. They will not be placed in the Library for reasons of confidentiality.

Special Learning Needs

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what specialist courses will be available under the new training scheme to bridge the skills gap for those with special learning needs.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training will offer all participants an individual action plan, drawn up to meet their particular training needs. This may involve training designed specifically for those people with learning difficulties.

Disabled Persons

Mr. Ashley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what steps he intends to take so that training agents and managers in the new programme are aware of the potential of people with disabilities and of the help available to assist them where appropriate.

Mr. Nicholls: Employment training will cater for the needs of all unemployed including those with disabilities. The MSC will ensure this in a number of ways. A guide for trainers of disabled participants will be produced together with a handbook for both training agents and training managers. Awareness modules will also be organised and a short presentation video produced.

Sexual Harassment

Ms. Harman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about equal opportunities and protection from sexual harassment in Manpower Services Commission training.

Mr. Nicholls: The Manpower Services Commission is committed to, and actively implements, a policy of equal opportunities throughout its training programmes. The commission will not tolerate sexual harassment by its officials, its training providers or by its trainees.

Departmental Spending

Mr. McLeish: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much was spent by the Manpower Services Commission and his Department for each of the years 1985, 1986 and 1987 and in each of the standard regions on (a) direct employment services for the disabled in jobcentres, (b) disabled resettlement officers and (c) advertising and promotional material.

Mr. Lee [holding answer 17 May 1988]: I regret that the information for (a) is not available. Information at (b) is not available by region, but nationally is estimated as: 1985-86 — £7·1 million; 1986-87 — £7·1 million; 1987-88—£7·4 million. Exact figures are not available as jobcentre costs are not separately apportioned between DROs and other jobcentre staff. Information for (c) is not available by region, but nationally is 1985-86 — £223,000; 1986-87—£201,000; 1987-88—£488,000.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Cleaning Staff

Ms. Walley: To ask the hon. Member for Berwick upon Tweed, answering on behalf of the House of Commons Commission, whether he is operating a vacancy discount system to the cleaning staff establishment; how long each of the 16 unfilled vacancies have been unfilled; which posts are currently in the process of being filled; what instructions have been given to reduce the cleaning specifications; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of standards of cleanliness.

Mr. Beith: No. As I indicated in my reply to the hon. Lady on 17 May 1988, at column 436, the difference between the complement of posts and cleaning staff employed represents the number of unfilled vacancies due to the steady and continuous turnover of staff. Two additional cleaning staff began work on 16 May 1988, reducing the shortfall against complement from 14 to 12. Another recruitment exercise is in progress, with a closing date for applications of 20 May 1988. No instructions have been given to reduce the cleaning specification. I understand that the Accommodation and Administration Sub-Committee plans to review the adequacy of standards of cleanliness.

TRANSPORT

National Bus Company

Mrs. Dunwoody: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what inquiries he made as to the status of purchasers of National Bus Company assests in relation to the holding of public service vehicle licences before the National Bus Company's assets were sold.

Mr. David Mitchell: Before putting forward its proposals for disposal of subsidiary companies NBC took steps to satisfy itself about the suitability of prospective purchasers including, where appropriate, their status as PSV operators.

London Underground

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the basis of the current statutory rules relating to the operations of one-person deep tube railways in London, other than the Victoria line; on what date they commenced; and what was the respective preceding instrument.

Mr. David Mitchell: Section 2 of the London Regional Transport Act 1984 makes London Regional Transport statutorily responsible for the safe running of its railways. There are no statutory rules relating specifically to one-person-operation. However, the criteria adopted for one-person-operation were drawn up by London Underground Limited in consultation with the Railway Inspectorate.

Channel Tunnel

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the owners of the Channel tunnel do not reduce their fares to less than the full cost, including interest payments on capital, in order to force the Channel ferries out of business.

Mr. David Mitchell: Under the Channel fixed link treaty and concession agreement, Eurotunnel is free to set tariffs without Government interference. It is, however, subject to national and Community competition law. Any necessary action would be for the Director General of Fair Trading and the European Commission or, since Community law is of direct effect, for private parties in the courts.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will publish in the Official Report (a) the projected cross-Channel passenger and freight traffic for 1987 as given or implied in his Department's 1973-74 report on the economics of the Channel tunnel, (b) the assumed level of fares and rates in 1987 in terms of 1987 prices and (c) the realised 1987 figures in each case.

Mr. David Mitchell: The forecasts to which the hon. Member refers are those in a report by Coopers and Lybrand Associates Ltd. presented to the then Secretary of State for the Environment on 31 May 1973. These forecasts were published by Her Majesty's Stationery Office in "The Channel Tunnel: A United Kingdom transport cost benefit study."

Section V of the report deals with traffic between Britain and Europe in the absence of a Channel tunnel and includes passenger and freight forecasts (tables 5.1 and 5.2). These forecasts relate to 1980 and 1990. The table compares the actual figures for passengers and freight in 1986, the latest year for which full figures are available, with the forecasts given in the report for 1980 and 1990.

	Forecast		Actual
	1980	1990	1986
PASSENGER TRAFFIC (000's)
Shipping services:
Accompanied vehicle passengers	9,230	19,331	14,000
Other passengers	7,756	10,718	7,300
Air services:
passengers	29,778	63,221	33,200
Total passengers	46,764	93,270	54,500
FREIGHT TRAFFIC (tonnes 000's)
Roll-on/Roll-off and container traffic	13,139	25,283	23,800

The forecasts assumed that fares and rates would remain at the 1971 level in real terms (except for a 20 per cent. increase in real terms on the Belgian straits shipping routes). As I indicated in my reply to a question from the hon. Member for Stretford (Mr. Lloyd) on Friday 13 May, at column 275, the Department has no responsibility for ferry fares and does not compile records of ferry fare levels.

Welsh Language

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his policy with regard to dealing with individuals and bodies in Wales who wish to communicate with his Department through the medium of the Welsh language.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Department's policy is to answer communications written in languages other than English in the same language, when practicable. Where there are time constraints, a reply in English is given. At the driver and vehicle licensing centre in Swansea, letters written in the Welsh language are answered in the same medium.

Mr. J. M. Heron (Accident)

Mr. Strang: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the recent accident to Mr. Herron, a seaman on the P and O vessel European Trader, and what information he has as to Mr. Herron's previous maritime experience.

Mr. David Mitchell: It is assumed that the person referred to in the question is Mr. J. M. Heron who is a seaman on the European Trader. It is understood that Mr. Heron suffered bruising to his legs in an incident during mooring on 15 May.

Mr. Heron passed the examination for an efficient deck hand certificate in 1984.

Associated British Ports (No. 2) Bill

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, pursuant to the answer of 16 May, Official Report, column 364, what specific aspects of the Associated British Ports (No. 2) Bill he discussed with the chairman of Associated British Ports at their meeting on 24 February; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Mitchell: The chairman explained ABP's proposals for developments at King's Lynn, Port Talbot and Immingham. It is perfectly normal and proper for the chairman of a major port undertaking to keep Ministers informed from time to time about developments affecting their ports. Among other things, he informed my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State of the extent of the opposition to this Bill and of the petitions against it.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 133

SESSION 1987–88

9th May-20th May 1988

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc, between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading Speaker's rulings and statements.

Other contributions by Mr Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Com = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
